Truck Firm Introduces New Hay Hauling Scale

An innovation which could revolutionize hay marketing procedures in Oregon was unveiled this week with the publication by Consolidated Freightways of "mileage" tariffs for hay hauling as opposed to the conventional city of origin-destination tariffs for other commodities.

Of particular interest to Western Oregon dairymen, the new rates, which have been approved by the Oregon Public Utilities commissioner, marks Consolidated's increasing activity in the field of transporting bulk agricultural commodities and is a step in the direction of stabilizing the hay market for the benefit of both the producer and consumer.

To illustrate how the mileage tariffs will work, as an example, take a dairyman living five miles south of Tillamook who wishes to purchase 18 tons (the minimum) of alfalfa hay from a rancher seven miles east of Pendleton. Quick reference to a standard mileage chart reveals that the distance from farm to farm is 294 miles, which according to Consolidated's published hay freight rates, takes a rate of 58 cents a hundred-weight or $11.60 a ton. Under the newly-published mileage tariffs, rates can be readily determined from any point-of-origin to any destination in the state.

The freight company is completely disinterested in the quality of the hay or the price paid for it, these being matters left to negotiation between buyer and seller.

Considered in all of its aspects, advent of Consolidated in this field as a disinterested carrier should materially reduce upgrading and short-weighting practices which now plague the industry. It will also add impetus to the movement toward government grading of hay and has wide ramifications in the way of encouraging expansion of the practice of buying hay at the time of harvest and—for a small fee—field storing at the point of production until needed for use.

Copies of the new hay freight rate schedule may be obtained on request from any Consolidated Freightways terminal or the Oregon Milk Producers, 3 Goldy Building, Medford.
