Movie Haymaker Draws Defense

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — John Wayne, a movie hero who has traded many an apparently maiming blow with most of the Hollywood bad guys, says those punches weren't pulled — they were mostly pushed.
"The real knockout travels about 12 inches or less and is a delight to boxing fans and sports writers," Wayne said. "The only trouble with it is in movies. It's no good there. It's just not photogenic as far as most of the people are concerned who see movies."
Wayne offered this as a defense in "Rio Bravo," a Howard Hawks film for Warner Bros. release in which he has several knock-down drag-out brawls which center around the easily visible if ineffectual punch.

"We think the fight's more interesting this way, too," Wayne said. "It's not a display of technique. It's like a good street-corner brawl, a rough and tumble deal in which someone gets hurt. And when lengthy toe-to-toe slug-fighting gets dull, we bring in furniture. I think that in a fight for survival, someone's likely to use whatever's handy as a weapon, and there always seem to be a couple of chairs."

OFF THE RANGE
HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Bill Williams, star of 25 westerns, was born in Brooklyn, N.Y. He never rode a horse until he appeared in his first Western.

NEWEST TV QUIZZER
NEW YORK (UPI) — Latest in proposed TV quiz shows would allow the contestant to choose his own prize, select a spot he wants to visit and pick his own means of transportation. It would be called, "Let Yourself Go."
