make me a better lawyer," Miss Kula explains, "it gave me a perspective of housing I wouldn't have otherwise. Public housing has been a national problem for more than 100 years in Britain, and they've achieved a broader attitude toward it than we have. Community planning is a profession over there, but we must draw planners from our engineers, architects, sociologists, politicians, and the other professions."

Miss Kula was enabled to plunge right into her study at Manchester with the help of an orientation course from the IIE's British cooperating agency. "Without a language barrier, they made it a lot easier for me to get to work right away," she says.

VAN CLIBURN, the young Texas pianist who stole the show at the International Tchaikovsky Music Festival in Moscow last Spring, also was helped by the IIE. The agency solicited the funds which made his trip to Russia possible—another example of how one simple exchange program can do more for international relations than 10 "summit" meetings.

Sen. J. William Fulbright of Arkansas, whose name has become synonymous with exchange scholarships, recently stated: "The exchange program is the thing that reconciles me to all the difficulties of political life. It's the one activity that gives me some hope that the human race won't commit suicide... Russia hasn't come under the Fulbright Act yet, but eventually I hope there will be an exchange of scholars between the Soviet Union and ourselves."

Even as the Senator spoke, arrangements were being completed for the exchange of American and Soviet students, 20 from each country, who will be leaving this month to spend their next academic year abroad, following other student visits in each country this Summer.

Founded in 1918 by Stephen Dugan, Elihu Root, and Nicholas Murray Butler, the Institute of International Education is a private, nonprofit organization. Except for the fees that it receives from governments and foundations for administering their programs, the IIE depends upon foundations, corporations, educational institutions, trade unions, and individuals to support its work. Its biggest headache these days is the handling of a rapidly growing work load with a limited staff.

Like Dr. Weber, many officials of foreign governments have visited the United States under the State Department's Foreign Leader Exchange Program. Typical visitors have been former Premier Felix Gaillard of France, German Foreign Minister Heinrich von Brentano, and cabinet officials Ragnar Edenman and Gosta Netzen of Sweden. The IIE is deeply involved in all these educational, cultural, and specialist exchanges. It arranges orientation programs, hospitality services, lectures and tours, as well as administering scholarships and fellowships. The IIE even coordinates partial grants from small groups and colleges to set up programs for students who otherwise would be unable to come to the United States.

Quietly but effectively, international exchange programs each year are adding to the thousands of young people who study abroad and return to fill responsible positions in their own countries. In their hands, the IIE believes, lies our best hope for world peace.
