Quips and Quotes

Sandpile

Our tiny tot
Would rather squat
In dirt and dig
With some old twig,
Than play in sand
As we had planned.
—Marjorie Fuller

A refugee couple arrived in the United States several years ago with one dream—to become citizens. Through much red tape and years of study, they were patient and hopeful. Then one day, the husband rushed into the kitchen with the long-awaited good news.

"Anna! Anna!" he shouted. "At last! We are Americans!"
"Fine," replied the wife, tying her apron around him. "Now you wash the dishes."

—Munich Review

How wives all love the dropper-inner
Who does his calling
after dinner!

—Annie Laurie
Von Tungeln

"It sure ain't no PET, mister. Just step around behind and she'll prove it!"

An Irishman, Englishman, and an American were on a plane flying over the Sahara desert. As they looked down on the vast emptiness from the plane windows, the Englishman said, "A beastly place!"

"The devil's own home," said the Irishman.
"What a parking lot!" exclaimed the American.

In the old days, folks used to wake up and say, "Good morning, Lord." Nowadays, we wake up and say, "Good lord! Morning!"
—Flowline

TV Endings Yet to Come

"Never mind the doc, Tex. It's too late. Serves me right for not minding my own business and trying to stop the Rafferty gang from running off the Widow Easton's stock. Oh, well, she's still got majority control of those 54 oil wells and first options on the uranium deposit, so let's forget it."

"All right, cast, let's have your attention. I've made up my mind—I'm absolutely determined—this Broadway show must not go on. Sure, I'll admit we're all young and zesty, but the New Haven reviewers were right. We haven't got talent."

"At last! After years of ruthless driving, they've elected me chairman of the board of Vastness Enterprises. I've used friends, then discarded them; I've driven my competitors to suicide. My assistants are in sanatoriums. My wife has left me, and my children loathe me. And what does it all mean—happiness, sheer happiness at $200,000 a year!"

"Well, that danged wonder dog has done it again—opened the sluice gates and flooded away the whole darn town. Wonder what fool thing he'll do next week?"

—Parke Cummings
