Here And There

By BILL JENKINS
Political years are always productive of a number of new things, but down in California I have a hunch that Governor Knight may have set a new precedent. He has named the week of September 21-27 as "state square dance week."
He maintains that square dancing has become an integral part of American life.
Now, I have nothing against square dancing. Used to dabble around with it myself until the old joints quit bending in their accustomed manner. But for anyone to say that it is becoming an integral part of American life is just a little more than I can swallow.
Does Governor Knight mean by this that history is repeating itself: Square dancing was certainly a part of American life at one time. Have we danced the century around and got back to the starting point?
Does this mean that the nickel beer, the free lunch, celluloid collars, the corn husking bee and the cheap automobile are also on the way to becoming integral parts of American life?
Does this mean prosperity is just around the corner?
Does this mean anything?

An item in one of the trade journals the other day informs us that a Chicago meat firm is now going into the mail order meat business.
For the sum of $19.95 they will deliver anywhere in the United States a package containing four filet mignons, two strip steaks (whatever they are) and four chopped tenderloin steaks. All cuts, it says, are prime quality and an inch and a quarter thick.
Now we can have wish-books for meat as well as everything else.
If it works...

I think I'll stick to the old fashioned butcher who cuts it right in front of me. In the first place I think I'll get better meat and in the second place it would be awfully hard to complain about a tough steak if the butcher was three thousand miles away.

Still in the culinary vein, another release tells us that frozen chopped onions sold under the trade name of "Weep-No-More" are keeping the tears from the cooks' eyes. Seems that freezing "immobilizes the volatile material" in the heat and makes it a positive pleasure to use.
Modern science has taken the drudgery out of the kitchen and is now working on the tears.

At least one manufacturer of small cars says that white is still the leading color. Following in order are light blue, red, primrose, black and gray.
When prosperity really gets here maybe we can have a color for every day in the week.

'Red China'

By FLOYD L. WYNNE
It's hazardous to attempt to interpret foreign policy these days the way things are going, but for what it's worth, here are a few notes in passing on the current Red China situation.
There are two courses of action that the United States can take right now. They can (1) stand up to the Red Chinese and tell them we will fight if they launch an assault against Quemoy and Matsu or Formosa or (2) we can put the pressure on Chiang Kai-shek to relinquish possession of these islands of Quemoy and Matsu and allow the Communists to take them over.
Frankly, those are the two choices that confront us now.
There is little point in talking about what we should or should not do with Formosa and Chiang Kai-shek.
To abandon Chiang and Formosa to the mercy of the Communists would be to abandon all of the Pacific Ocean area back to the Hawaiian Islands.
To relinquish our stand that Red China should not be admitted to the U.N. would be to acknowledge that any nation can "shoot" its way into the U.N.
But let us process the two moves that are open to us now in the Formosa problem.
First, we have already stood up to the Red Chinese and in effect told them in no uncertain terms that any military move against the off-shore islands would be met by the force of the United States. That's clear beyond all doubt.
President Eisenhower also pointed out to the Reds that we were willing to resume negotiations with them and talks are even now underway at Warsaw.
It becomes clear that we are attempting to do two things. First, we want the Communists of China to renounce the use of force against Formosa. In other words, Red China must stop its "live and let live" policy toward Formosa and the Nationalist Chinese.

Secondarily, if the Red Chinese renounce the use of force and abandon military preparations against Formosa, then we will put our weight on Chiang to abandon the off-shore islands to Red China, thus abandoning the blockade that holding these islands has held on the ports of Amoy and Foochow.

This, in effect, would erase the most immediate points of contention between Red China and Free China and clear the way to an eventual policy of "live and let live" between the two Chinas.

This would also, in turn, permit Red China later to be admitted to the United Nations.

Thus, it becomes apparent that the entire picture hangs on Red China.

If she barges ahead with her intentions to militarily assault the off-shore islands or even Formosa, she runs the risk of war with the United States.

In such a war she could only stand to suffer tremendous injury and be unable to inflict much damage against the United States.

So she faces a choice of (1) a damaging war with the United States and possible defeat or (2) renouncing aggression and gaining possession of the off-shore islands.

You cannot contain aggression by retreating before it. That's a fact that history has proven time and time again. An aggressor merely continues to demand more until the point is reached from which there is no retreat.

If we were to abandon Chiang and Formosa to Red China, it would not be long before we would be driven out of South Korea by the same show of force, and then out of South Indochina, and then out of Okinawa.

Then, the Philippines would come under Communist threat and domination and so forth across the Pacific.

It appears clear that we have deliberately left the choice up to Communist China. She can now become the "peace loving" nation she claims she is and agree to renounce aggression and settle differences over the negotiations table, or she can be unmasked as an aggressor intent on military conquest and run headlong into the full might of the United States.

We have made the issue clear for all the world to see.
It remains to be seen which way the Chinese Communists will decide to go.

Keep OTI Here

By FLORENCE JENKINS
A strong desire for individual participation in a move to keep Oregon Technical Institute in Klamath Falls is evidenced by a number of things that are happening.
It is pretty generally agreed that "we ought to be doing something," but organization is needed.
One group has plans underway to help the students. The Klamath County Farm Bureau Women, on learning that enrollment at Oregon Tech is expected to be greater this year, is going to set up a student loan fund. Their goal is $1,000 and it is a good bet that their enthusiasm will carry them far beyond their goal.
The Klamath Falls Center of the Farm Women will hold their kick-off event in the form of a silver tea at the home of Mrs. Walt McIntyre, 230 North Fourth, on Saturday afternoon, October 18, to coincide with the date of OTI Homecoming.
In making the loan fund available to students, the women will request that preference be given in the field of agriculture and to students from rural districts.

A large percentage of the Oregon Tech students seek financial help through employment or loans before completing their chosen courses of study. A fund to supplement loan funds already available for student use will permit more of the students to finish their studies.
A pet project of Mrs. Fred Ruck, chairman of Klamath County Farm Women, is dressing a collection of dolls to represent the areas of instruction at Oregon Tech. Some of these have been completed and will be on display at the silver tea on October 18. More will be dressed for sale at a later date.
Napkins and place mats bearing the OTI Owl will be on display at the tea, also.
The Farm Women will add to the loan fund through their food sale at the Klamath Basin Potato Festival at Merrill on the weekend of October 24-26.
A bazaar is slated for later in the year, probably November.
These Farm Women represent about 500 Klamath County families which stand solidly behind Oregon Tech in Klamath Falls. Their influence for their favorite project is bound to be felt.
Let's help them all we can and let's come up with some ideas of our own for keeping Oregon Tech where it belongs.

Attitude Change
By DAVID HOTHAM
United Press International
ANKARA, Turkey (UPI) — One of the most striking results of summer crisis in the Middle East has been a complete change in Turkey's attitude on the Cyprus issue.
Throughout May and June, mobs all over Turkey were yelling "Partition or death." Violent anti-British and even anti-American press campaigns were the order of the day. People gravely warning the world that Turkey might go neutral or leave the NATO alliance.
Now a few months later, there are no mass meetings. Nothing is heard of "partition or death." The anti-Western press campaign has ceased and Turkey is more firmly an ally than ever.

Turkey has announced she will support the modified British plan for Cyprus. Complete harmony has been restored between Turkish and Western diplomats.
What has brought Turkey back to the fold? It was a combination of factors: The Iraqi revolution and its aftermath; large new Western credits for Turkey; strong American persuasion on Turkey to take a reasonable line with Britain over Cyprus; and certain diplomatic advantages to be drawn by Turkey at the expense of her old enemy, Greece.
The Iraqi coup d'etat, by adding a further 150 miles or so of potentially hostile border to Turkey's southern frontier, has made the Ankara government realize the very unpleasant dangers of isolation. She has greater need than ever of her Western allies.
The Western powers recently have decided to help Turkey out of her very serious economic difficulties, to the tune of over 350 million dollars plus a standstill on a large number of foreign debts for a number of years.
The new Western economic aid has helped to strengthen the wobbly government of Premier Adnan Menderes at the moment when it most needed support.
The Cyprus issue, it was generally believed, was partly an artificial issue in Turkey raised into a hullabaloo to distract the increasingly discontented people from their real grievances over shortages and the rising cost of living.

It is an open secret here that the U.S. government has worked hard behind the scenes to persuade the Turks that the British plan for Cyprus is the best bargain Turkey is likely to get, and that she would be wise to accept the plan.
The plan gives advantages to the Cypriot Turks out of proportion to their numerical strength on the island.
The support given by Washington to the British plan has been one of the most important new factors which has worked toward a Cyprus settlement. Up till now the American government had stayed clear of the Cyprus issue.

Inflation Worry
By SAM DAWSON
AP Business News Analyst
NEW YORK (AP)—Belief that business recovery won't be stymied by an auto strike is somewhat tempered today by worry over the possible inflationary aspects of the new labor pact at Ford.

Both labor and management insist that the new wage hikes and other benefits are noninflationary.
The public will probably make up its mind about that after it sees:
1. The prices for the new models.
2. The psychological effect, if any, on wage negotiations in other industries now under way or to start in coming months.
In the matter of prices it's noted that the current settlement provides a much smaller wage boost than was made in the 1955 settlement. The big hike at that time was widely believed to have helped trigger the rise in the cost of living that has continued up to now.
Today's argument is that the present smaller wage boost might be absorbed by increased productivity and efficiency in the plants and by dealers in the present more competitive market.
The new car prices also will be affected by rising costs other than labor. Prices of some materials, notably steel, have risen recently, following a wage boost in that industry. The costs of getting materials to the auto plants and of getting cars and trucks to dealers also have risen.
The first price list on 1959 models, that of Ford, was announced before the Buick agreement, which is expected to set a pattern for General Motors and Chrysler as well. The Buick prices might have taken into consideration an expected wage hike, but they offer few clues. They range from $63 more than Buick's lowest priced model last year to $491 less than its highest priced.
Labor leaders and labor relations executives belittle the belief that one industry's labor contract sets a pattern for others.
Outsiders aren't so sure. The Auto Workers Union, seeking a new contract with the makers of farm machinery, seem likely to be swayed by the settlement they made with Ford. The Electrical Workers Union also deals with the auto industry.
Since World War II there appears to have been a definite pattern among similar industries.
With auto labor peace apparently in the final stages of negotiation, economic interest in Detroit will now concentrate on the public reception of the new models which will be making their bows in increasing volume.
Recovery hasn't been tripped up by an auto strike. Now it's to be seen if increased auto sales can help get recovery out of low gear.
