Complete Rare Book On Drake Found

PROVIDENCE, R. I. (UPI) — Back in 1925 a book dealer in the Netherlands offered the John Carter Brown Library at Brown University a copy of a rare little volume.

Printed in Amsterdam in 1596, the book told of the voyages of Sir Francis Drake. It was supposed to have four illustrations, but this particular copy had none.

However, Brown librarian Lawrence C. Wroth decided to buy the book, hoping that some day the missing illustrations would turn up and could be added to it. Two years later Wroth located and acquired one of the missing illustrations.

Last year, 30 years later, Wroth retired as librarian with the Drake book still missing three plates.

A few weeks ago, Wroth's successor, Thomas R. Adams, was surprised to receive from another American librarian a copy of the Drake book which had been offered to him by an English dealer. This one had four illustrations.

DISCRIMINATION

HARTFORD, Conn. (UPI)—The top floor of a department store here is the only one in the building that's not air-conditioned. That is where the executives have their offices.

Arctic Circle Life Possibility Eyed

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — A University of Wisconsin research team has started work on a project aimed at luring homesteaders to frontier settlements north of the Arctic Circle.

Prof. Kirk H. Stone of the university's geography department will direct the three-year study to determine the future development potentialities of the extreme northern areas of Norway, Sweden, Finland and Alaska.

Stone and six assistants will study all attempts that have been made to live in frigid climates of the north country and try to come up with a successful formula.

He hopes to lay the groundwork for permanent settlements in the four areas which he says "are of great strategic importance and significance to the free world in both war and peace."

Stone started a similar project in 1941 but was cut short by World War II. The present effort has the financial backing of the U.S. government, the Fulbright program and the university here.

Wild Water Sport Breaks Into Movies

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Movies will soon present to viewers a sport new to many of them. It's often called the wildest, fastest natural water sport known to man.

Surfing in its name, or how to ride ocean breakers at breakneck speeds without breaking your neck.

The film, Columbia's "Gidget," was shot at Malibu and San Onofre beaches in Southern California. Its stars—Sandra Dee, James Darren and Cliff Robertson—had to learn the tricky sport for the picture, which also has something to do with teen-age romance.

Japanese Seek Archeological Data

LIMA, Peru (UPI)—A group of Japanese scientists have begun a scheduled 10-year study of the principal archeological centers of Peru and Bolivia in search of the origins of civilization in this part of the New World.

The archeologists, who comprise the "Andean Scientific Expedition" of the Imperial University of Tokyo, arrived here recently from Japan. Heading the eight-man team is Dr. Eiichiro Ishida, specialist in ethnology and archeology.

He explained there is "enormous interest in Japan" in the expedition's object—to confirm the generally accepted theory that the first inhabitants of America came from Asia via the Bering Straits and Alaska some 20,000 years ago.
