Expert To Make Study

Engagement of a forestry educator to make a special economic study of the Douglas-fir timber subregion has been announced by R. W. Cowlin, director of the Forest Service's Pacific Northwest Forest and Range Experiment Station at Portland.

Dr. William A. Duerr, chairman of the forestry economics department at the New York State College of Forestry, will spend about a year in the Pacific Northwest, making an economic analysis of trends and developments in the forest resource situation in western Washington, western Oregon, and Northern California.

Dr. Duerr has had wide experience in the field of forestry economics. Before joining the staff of the New York Forestry College in 1952, he worked 18 years for the U.S. Forest Service, chiefly in the South. His last Forest Service assignment was as assistant chief of forest economics research in the agency's Washington, D.C. office.

Dr. Duerr is author of a number of publications, including a book on the economic problems of forestry in the Appalachian region. He is co-editor of another book, "Research in the Economics of Forestry," and is now writing a textbook on the fundamentals of forestry economics for the American Forestry Series. He has a bachelor of science (forestry) degree from Iowa State College, a master of science degree in agricultural economics from the University of Minnesota, and a doctorate in economics from Harvard University.
