New Approach Taken By AEC

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (AP)—A new approach to the formidable problem of disposing of radioactive wastes has been started at the Atomic Energy Commission's eastern Idaho testing station west of here.

To illustrate the problem, Dr. Richard F. Post of the University of California's Radiation Laboratory once said that if all present power were supplied by nuclear fission reactors, "we would have to dispose each year of an amount of radioactive fission products equal to that from the explosion of 200,000 atomic bombs."

That makes current fall-out problems from the few nuclear bombs exploded each year seem trivial.

The new method takes the liquid (water is often used to cool or moderate the reactor) radioactive waste and dries it in a flash by spraying it across hot granular beds.

The waste left is a solid occupying a great deal less space than when it was in the liquid. Scientists of the Phillips Petroleum Co. and Argonne National Laboratory who developed the process estimate it will reduce the volume of waste to about a seventh its previous bulk.

The solidified waste can then be stored in a much smaller space than required to store the liquid in tanks.

Fluor Corp. Ltd., of Los Angeles began work on the six-million-dollar pilot plant this week. Completion is expected early in 1960. The AEC said it, Fluor and Phillips designed the plant.

Perique tobacco, a strong spicy leaf, is grown only in Louisiana.
