

Ohio Election Stirred By Right-To-Work Law

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — The right-to-work issue has really stirred things up in this year's Ohio election.

Even seasoned politicians are having their troubles figuring the outcome.

Right now, the Ohio capital is solidly Republican from cellar to cupola. All officeholders from Gov. C. William O'Neill on down seek reelection, not for two-year terms as in the past, but for four-year terms. Another GOP stalwart, John W. Bricker, is a candidate for a third U.S. Senate term.

This strange and fascinating campaign, in the opinion of competent observers, appears to be shaping up in this singular pattern:

Ohio voters probably will write into the state constitution a right-to-work section—a provision prohibiting union shop contracts as a condition for holding a job.

But Republican Gov. O'Neill, who is stumping for the proposal, appears on the ragged edge of defeat after only one term in office.

His Democratic challenger, Michael V. DiSalle, who personally opposes the union shop prohibition, sees victory finally within his grasp despite a trouncing by O'Neill in 1956.

And Bricker, who delayed taking a public position on the constitutional proposal, appears a cinch to coast to another victory, this one over former Ohio Congressman-at-large Stephen M. Young, Democrat.

Republicans who now control the Ohio delegation in the U.S. House 17-6 and both houses of the Ohio Legislature are plainly scared—but hoping for the best.

Why, after rolling up huge majorities in 1956, are they running scared this year? Three reasons:

1. They fear that a Democratic trend, noted nationally, has seeped into Ohio. They recall that for the first time in a generation Democrats outvoted Republicans in the May primaries—by 100,000 votes.
 2. They expect organized labor's desperate campaign to stave off the right-to-work proposal will lure many union members to the polls. Among union members, the GOP figures, there are more Democrats than Republicans.
 3. Voter registration, in the populous counties which require it, is at a record high for a non-presidential election year. Election officials say the right-to-work issue is responsible. True, they say, many Ohioans registered so they would be able to vote for it, but the big push for registrations was among the groups fighting it.
- O'Neill was the golden boy of Ohio politics when he was elected governor two years ago at the age of 40. He already had 12 years in the Legislature and six years as attorney general under his belt.
- Beset by a series of public relations hobbles on relatively minor issues, O'Neill suffered a heart attack early this year. He recovered quickly, but some dissatisfaction with his administration within his own party was indicated in the May primary when Charles P. Tait racked up 36 per cent of the Republican vote without campaigning.
- Unquestionably, O'Neill has regained some of his political luster. DiSalle, 50, once known nationally as President Truman's roly-poly, jovial director of price stabilization, has shed most of his excess weight. The joking is under wraps and his mustache is gone too.
