County Officials Meeting To Hear Road Proposals

Three recommendations — two of them definitely affecting the South Suburban area of Klamath Falls — will be presented to a statewide meeting of county officials in Portland next month.

The two proposals concern roads. Both were recommended by Klamath County Commissioner Jerry J. Haines at a joint meeting Tuesday of the roads and highways and county engineers committees of the Association of Oregon Counties in Portland.

The measures:

1. That a percentage of county funds may be used on public roads such as streets in the South Suburban area. The law now requires that all county road funds be used on county roads only. The measure, as presented, would not affect some counties with heavy urban populations.

2. That any city annexing a suburban area also should take over all streets in the suburb. Annexations now include suburban streets but do not include county roads within the annexed territory. Haines explained that both measures will be recommended as resolutions before the convention of the Association of Oregon Counties in Portland in November.

Another committee recommendation would style in uniform language permits issued by counties for public utilities, streets, sewers, bridges and other matters.

Appearing before the county court Wednesday was the county planning commission to discuss potential zoning restrictions in the future. The court asked for a written report on its survey and its recommendations for study. Any zoning restrictions would be subject to popular vote.

The court's room was occupied Tuesday by the State Public Utilities Commission for hearings requested by the Great Northern and Oregon, California and Eastern railways on railroad crossings. The railroad asked that logging trucks be required to stop before crossing tracks at Olney, Sprague River and Five-Mile Road.

County Judge Charlie Mack has been asked to serve on the federal real property committee of the National Association of County Officials. Mack, already a member of state and interstate associations of county officials, said he would accept the appointment but he didn't know whether he would accept an invitation to attend the organization's convention November 23-25 in Asheville, North Carolina.

Modoc County Supervisor James Stearns of Eureka is vice chairman of the committee on which Mack will serve.

Alturas Student Award Winner

ALTURAS — A leadership scholarship in the amount of $100 was presented to Carla M. Hess, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Derril M. Hess of Alturas, by the Standard Oil Company of California, Western Operations, recently.

Carla was an outstanding student at Modoc Union High School and was honored as homecoming queen, secretary of the senior class, president of C.A.A. board member, and she was a runner-up in the recent Modoc County Fair queen.

Saudis Seek Closer Ties

By TOM A. CULLEN

CAIRO (NEA) — There's still no love lost between Egypt's Gamal Abdel Nasser and Saudi Arabia's King Saud, but relations between the two nations have taken a sudden and dramatic turn for the better.

The change may benefit Saudi in the short run, but from a Cairo viewpoint it appears the long-range benefits will be Nasser's. Saudi has long feared Nasser's dynamic Arab nationalism as a threat to his feudal, autocratic rule, and Nasser has long coveted Saudi's rich oil income. Each has plotted against the other's life with monotonous regularity.

Last March, Nasser accused Saudi of financing an alleged assassination plot against him. This was the low point in relations between the two nations.

Prince Feisal, despite his pro-Nasser leanings, is not blind to Nasser's intentions. Meanwhile, he talks softly, avoids the limelight as much as possible, and above all, the appearance of being a friend of America.

To gain time for his country, Feisal may even turn the idea of joining Nasser's United Arab Republic on a federated basis, being careful to avoid the strange hold of outright union which was Syria's fate.

The feeling here, however, is that time is running out for Saudi Arabia. She is one of the most backward states in the Middle East, and without drastic change cannot long resist the dynamics of Nasserism.

United under one ruler for the first time by the late King Ibn Saud in 1932, Saudi Arabia has failed to keep abreast of the times. Her juridical system is based on Islamic law, and antiquated one hand is still the penalty for theft. Commercial law is unknown, and there are no laws governing inheritance. Result: chaos and confusion in business dealings. Saudi Arabia remains one of the few black spots where a slave trade flourishes.

Time is running fast. The question is: How much longer does Saudi Arabia have to put her political and financial house in order?

King Saud's monarchy appears doomed. His financial affairs are in a mess; the Saudi Treasury is still picking up the tabs for bills run up abroad by members of the 400-strong royal household. And there is the oil. Nasser's interest in Saudi Arabia is primarily in its oil. "Arab oil," he calls it, neglecting to mention its source. He would like to get the hands on the oil that he believes which the Arabian American Oil Company (Aramco) pays King Saud for the privilege of extracting petroleum.

Feisal apparently realizes that Saudi Arabia is racing against time. The prince has given his ministers responsibility. No longer does Saudi Arabia's budget consist of a little black notebook carried in the minister of finance's hip pocket. National income and expenditure are now a matter of public record (though the subsidies

DIVORCE REFUSED

LONDON (UPI)—The judge refused Wednesday to grant Leslie Morgan, 34, a divorce from his Danish-born wife on the ground of mental cruelty. Mrs. Morgan said she hauled him out only because he insisted on seeing any movie and unflatteringly comparing her with the actresses.

PNW Scribe Dead At 87

PORTLAND (AP)—Fred Lockley, who interviewed hundreds of persons as a reporter for the Oregon Journal, died Wednesday. He was 87.

Lockley as a young man went to Alaska during the Gold Rush, and throughout his life was a member of the Yukon Sourdough Assn.

Later, from 1901-1905, he was a staff writer of the Portland East Oregonian, along with the late C. S. Jackson.

As a member of the Journal staff, he was a correspondent in France in World War I and wrote a daily column for the newspaper. Lockley became widely known for the column, first called "Impressions and Observations of The Journal Man," and later "Fred Lockley's Impressions."

Funeral services will be held here Saturday.
