Quips and Quotes

Elmer was always the dullest pupil in the teacher's class, but one day she took hope. Elmer watched her every move as she explained a series of arithmetic problems. With each new problem, his interest became more obvious, until the happy teacher had to ask, "Elmer, you're so intent today, I'm sure you want to ask some questions."

"Yes, m'am," said Elmer in awe, "where do them numbers go when you rub 'em off the board?"—Texas Outlook

The young man was so obviously happy, that his friend asked him what had happened. "I've fallen in love," was the ecstatic answer. Then he went on to tell how wonderful his new girl was.

"And pretty?" asked the friend. "Beautiful. Flowing blonde hair, cornflower blue eyes, perfect teeth, weighs about 350 pounds..."

"Wow!" exclaimed the friend. "She must be awfully fat!"

"Not at all," replied the lover reflectively, "but t-a-l-l!"

Two men were talking about old-timers who never lost their enthusiasm for women. "Why," said one, "my grandfather was a perfect example of the eternal Don Juan. Women were crazy about him to the last." "And was he crazy about women?" asked the other. "Very much. With each new conquest he'd put another notch in his cane. It killed him, of course."

"His interest in women?"

"No. He made the mistake of leaning on the cane one day!"—Grit

Someday I'll Answer...

(Husband:
"What did you do all day?")

I didn't wash the dishes
And I didn't make
the bed,
Your clothes are
where you left them—
I sat all day and read.
I overlooked the ironing
The wash and
mending, too,
As far as I'm concerned
There's not a thing to do.
Your dinner isn't ready
And the toys are in the way,
And that My Darling
Husband
Is what I didn't do
all day.

Motion-picture production in Hollywood is at a low ebb. Two veteran producers were discussing the sad state of business in a popular meeting place recently. "Terrible, terrible," one wailed. "Why I haven't made a film in three years!"

"Is that all—why, I haven't made a picture in five!" The second producer thought over his remark, then added, "I sure wish I could figure a way to get out of this business!"
