

Never Put Trust In Horse Comments Gary Cooper

By BOB THOMAS
ST. GEORGE, Utah, (AP)—
"The horse is a highly overrated animal. They're dumb as hell, and you can't trust them one bit. Heresy, you say? Perhaps, but our authority is none other than Gary Cooper, one of the few stars with an authentic Western background."

The racy Montanan gazed up at the red bluffs of this southern Utah wilderness and reflected: "When I was 14 or 15, I used to ride alone for days through country like this." One thing he learned: never trust a horse.

Contrarily, he has learned another axiom in more than 30 years of loping through the movie scene: always trust a horse opera.

Yup, Ole Coop is back in the saddle again after ventures into sports cars and limousines. After two midding films, "Love in the Afternoon" and "10 North Frederick," he has done three horse-back pictures in a row.

His latest, "They Came to Cordura," is being filmed in Utah. It's technically not a Western, but there are plenty of horses. Producer William Goetz assembled 300 horses and riders to recreate the last U. S. Cavalry charge during General Pershing's invasion of Mexico in 1916. The rest of the picture largely concerns the trek of Cooper and five others across the Mexican wasteland.

How does it feel to be back on a horse?

"It hurts," Cooper confessed. He explained: "It's painful for me to be in the saddle too long. No, it's not because of an injury I got from a horse. When I was getting started in pictures, I used to take horse falls for $15 a fall and I never had a scratch."

"But I did a lot of skiing after the war, and that's what banged me up."

Newcomers might find profit in a credo that might help explain Cooper's amazing three decades as a star: "I always made it a point to do at least one Western every two years. In years when I did four pictures, usually one of them would be a Western."

Two hunters who had come from the Oregon Coast to hunt in Lake County were arrested on Saturday for having too many geese in their possession.

The men, Gene Mathew Lemmer, 45, and Donald Guy Shore, 32, both of Coquille, were arrested at Warner Valley public hunting area by federal game management agents on October 12.

The men entered pleas of guilty the same day before U.S. Commissioner Bert C. Thomas in Klamath Falls and each paid a fine of $250.

The 25 geese, 12 over the legal limit of birds in possession, have been delivered to the Klamath Nursing Home on Summers Lane.

Four County Men To Enter Army
Two cousins will be included in Klamath County's draft contingent for October, which consists of just three men—all volunteers.

The cousins are Jerry Alois Rajnus, 19, Star Route, Malin, a son of County Commissioner and Mrs. Jerry Rajnus, and William Joseph Rajnus, Box 63, Malin.

The third volunteer is Paul Arthur Svoboda, 19, now living at 240 Berrydale Avenue in Medford. Svoboda's Klamath Falls address is 2020 Arthur Street.

A fourth man also will leave for service but not under the draft quota. He is Jimmy Lyon Alston, 19, 2140 Wantland Avenue, Klamath Falls.

The men will leave here October 27 for induction at Portland and subsequent basic training at Fort Ord, California.

Mail Gifts Early Says Post Office
WASHINGTON (UPI)—Families of servicemen overseas should do their Christmas gift mailing by Nov. 29 to assure delivery at foreign posts by Dec. 25.

A Defense Department statement also urged that packages be securely wrapped in cartons of wood, metal, or double faced corrugated fiber board.

Labor Has Little Luck In Repealing Work Laws

By RAYMOND LAHR
United Press International
WASHINGTON (UPI)—Organized labor has met with little success so far in its campaigns to overturn right-to-work laws in states which have adopted such statutes.

The laws still are in force in 18 states. In some cases, the momentum behind repeal apparently has become progressively weaker as time wears on.

Union leaders are fighting to block enactment of such laws this year in California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Ohio and Washington, where the issue will be on the ballot for the Nov. 4 election.

They also hope to help elect an Indiana legislature to repeal a law enacted last year and legislatures in other states to repeal or block enactment of right-to-work laws.

Such laws outlaw union shop contracts and other labor-management agreements which require employees to belong to unions to hold their jobs.

Among the states which adopted full-blown right to work laws, only Louisiana has put through a repeal. The Louisiana legislature enacted a law in 1954 and repealed it in 1956 after labor asserted it had played a part in unseating some 70 members who originally had voted for the measure.

After repealing the general law, the Louisiana lawmakers passed another applying only to agricultural and certain processing employees.

Supporters of the general Louisiana law said 481 million dollars was invested in new industry during the first five months of 1956 while the statute was in force. Foes of the law countered that investments ran as high as 900 million a year when there was no right to work law.

The Maine legislature approved a bill in 1947 to outlaw the closed shop, under which new employees must be union members when hired, but to permit the union shop, under which new employees

Gilchrist Club Holds Meeting
CRESCENT—The Gilchrist Garden Club met Wednesday evening, October 15, at the Gilchrist Methodist Church with 15 members present.

The group voted to again sponsor a Camp Fire Girls group this year. Mrs. Vern Roebek showed slides of Hawaii she had taken during her vacation on the island this summer. Mrs. Charles Shotts, who had lived in Hawaii for several years, contributed two Hawaiian hula dance numbers to the program.

Hostesses were Dorothy Houston and Mrs. Vern Roebek, who in keeping with the Hawaiian theme, wore Hawaiian robes while serving refreshments. The next meeting will be a field trip, November 15, to gather dry materials.

Stock, Bond Speculation Causes Eyebrow Raising

By ELMER C. WALZER
UPI Financial Editor
NEW YORK (UPI)—The usual hue and cry against speculators that appears each time there is a margin increase is in the air again.

One can speculate in real estate, in soybeans, in diamonds, or in paper cups and no one says anything about it. But when one speculates in stocks or bonds, the politicians and other observers make it sound like something illegal or just plain bad.

All sorts of things are being said about the people who recently speculated in government bonds and got their fingers burned.

Now that margins have been boosted to 90 per cent by the Federal Reserve Board, there is talk that speculators have been sending stock prices soaring to the detriment of the economy.

Wall Street points out that little speculation can be done with margins at 70 per cent and practically none with them at 90 per cent. The current market practically is on a cash basis, these experts assert.

SPECULATION NECESSARY
There still is speculation in the market definition of the word. Suppose someone buys a nondividend payer in the hope the price will appreciate and he can make a profit. That's one form of speculation as opposed to investment where one buys a stock for income. Short selling also is classed as speculation.

Both these types of speculation are considered highly necessary for a liquid market. The investor can find buyers for a stock he wants to sell. The speculator helps produce activity and keep the market in a narrow area. Without speculation, there might well be very wide changes in price between sales, it is pointed out.

And those government bond speculators did a big service for the Treasury too, according to Aubrey G. Lanston, dealer in government and head of the firm that bears his name.

HELPED SALES
Speaking of Treasury financing over the past 15 months, he says: "The Treasury invited speculators to underwrite its offering of securities with a term past one year and without a good dose of speculation the Treasury would not have been able to sell the $28,500,000,000 of such securities that it sold during the 11 months ending last June."

He cites several other government offerings which he says were successfully sold "because of the speculative appeal the Treasury tailored into the offerings."

He holds excessive speculation tends to be self-correcting and doesn't believe speculation will enter the Treasury security market as freely as it did before because of the heavy losses to speculators recently.

must join the union within 30 days.

This law was not enforced pending a referendum vote in the 1948 election, when a right-to-work proposition also was submitted to the voters. Both were defeated.

Delaware enacted a bill in 1947 declaring merely that union security agreements were against public policy and that it was not an unfair labor practice for an employer to refuse to grant a closed or union shop. This law was repealed in 1949.

The New Hampshire legislature passed in 1947 and repealed in 1949 a bill outlawing union security agreements for firms with five or less employees. It also set up certain conditions to be met for such contracts in larger companies.

Besides Maine, right-to-work measures were defeated in referendum votes in California in 1944, Massachusetts and New Mexico in 1948 and Washington in 1956. They also have been introduced in the legislatures of 17 other states, which failed to pass them.

Both Arizona and Nevada have approved right-to-work laws three times. In each case, the first vote was favorable and the law was supported by increased majorities in two later repeal efforts.

The Tennessee law, enacted in 1947, has not become a major political issue. Repeal efforts have grown progressively weaker and no serious repeal effort was made in the last legislative session in 1947.

In a number of other states, repeal drives have foundered and in some of them labor leaders have abandoned hope for action in the near future.

Tigard Voters Veto Move Again
TIGARD (AP)—For the second time in four months the voters of Tigard turned down a measure to incorporate their community into a legal town.

The vote was 354 to 226 in Monday's election.

Both times the measure was sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce.
