

BALINESE DANCE MASK, painstakingly fashioned from papier mache, sets the stage for this Balinese dish of chicken breasts and coconut, served with cups of freshly brewed tea.

Chicken Balinese Applesauce Cake

Bali is known among the islands of Indonesia as The Happy Land. There are many reasons for this: the beauty of its people and its rice fields, bamboo groves, and coconut palms, the gentleness and imagination of the Balinese people, the vitality of its arts. But one reason seems to stand out among all others: it is the marvelous Balinese faculty of invention, which in turn is due to the fact that they are easily bored.

Temples are rebuilt at least every generation, old and beautiful carvings and sculpture are scrapped to make way for equally beautiful new examples. Women lavish days making for village festivals which last for only a few hours.

The Balinese feel the same way about cooking, and spend themselves without stint on creating new combinations of exotic spices to flavor their native dishes. Coconut is an essential element in native cooking. Coconut oil often takes the place of butter and coconut milk is used instead of fresh milk. Rice, as in most Oriental countries, is the mainstay of their diet, and those who have lived for long in the East feel that no meal is complete without it — not even breakfast. And they feel the same way about tea. Like the glint of the moon on the coconut palms, tea lends its luminous flavor to all their most artful dishes. This popular beverage is served at all hours of the day and it would be unthinkable to serve a meal without many cups of the aromatic brew.

As we in America become more aware and interested in the foods from other lands, we, too, will discover the pleasure of sipping tea along with our food. It is the perfect accompaniment for spicy foods; the most refreshing and relaxing beverage to drink at any time of day.

Serve tea on your table with this delicate dish of chicken and coconut artfully seasoned with coriander and allspice.

- CHICKEN BALINESE
1 tender chicken, cut into serving portions, or 6 breasts of chicken
1/2 teaspoon salt
1/4 teaspoon pepper
1 clove garlic, minced
1 onion, minced
2 cups milk
1 can (3 1/2 oz.) coconut
1 teaspoon chili powder
1 teaspoon paprika
1/2 teaspoon allspice
1 teaspoon coriander
3 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon flour
Juice of 1/2 lemon

Put chicken pieces into a bowl and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Add garlic and onion. Combine milk, flaked coconut, chili powder, paprika, allspice and coriander and pour mixture over chicken. Marinate in the refrigerator for 6 hours, or overnight.

When ready to cook, remove chicken pieces from the marinade. Melt butter in a heavy skillet and in it saute the chicken pieces for about 20 minutes, or until browned on both sides and cooked through, turning the pieces several times during the cooking. Remove chicken to a warm serving platter and stir into the pan juices the flour, and cook, stirring, for 3 minutes. Add lemon juice and pour sauce over the chicken. Serve with cooked rice and steaming cups of brisk tea.
