

Officials Should Be Honest, Admit Tax Hike, Says Solon

PORTLAND (AP)—Grass roots officials would be less than honest unless they admit taxes are going up. Sen. Richard L. Neuberger (D-Ore.) told the Assn. of Oregon Counties Thursday.

Promises of tax cuts are "political demagoguery," the state's junior senator declared.

"The hard truth is that taxes are going to go up," Neuberger said, "and it is of the utmost responsibility for officials to tell you they are going to be cut in the face of Russia's challenge to this nation's existence."

If not one single new student shows up in Oregon's schools next year inflation alone will increase government cost three per cent, he said.

And the state, he added, will have to raise 20 million dollars in matching funds for the federal highway aid program if it is to get 70 million dollars for primary and secondary roads.

Neuberger said he opposed deficit spending for highways and supported President Eisenhower's plan to raise gasoline taxes one to two and one-half cents above the three-cent a gallon tax level to make the motorist pay for the roads.

He said he favored Oregon matching the federal funds through increased gasoline taxes rather than through bond issues that would shift the debt to future generations.

"That is why I hope, that in his campaign promises not to increase any state taxes, Gov.-elect Hatfield did not foreclose his future administration from effectively following through on Oregon's share of the highway program," he said.

Neuberger said manufacturing is concentrated heavily in eight states providing their governments with vast tax sums, some of which should be distributed among other states by the federal government.

"The inadequacy of local tax sources, rather than any congressional wish to expand the federal government, is also the reason why federal financial assistance is needed for such things as schools and water pollution," he added.

FORGETFUL

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — Mrs. Pietra Fago recently had a new roof put on her house.

After the job was completed, she lit a fire in the stove. Soon the house was full of smoke.

The fire department investigated. Someone forgot to put the chimney back on the roof.

WHA' HOPPEN' was the reaction of Ronald Carter and employees of Carter's Fine Foods about noon Thursday when with a loud crash, a great many groceries cascaded off the shelves of the store. This minor, localized earthquake was caused by a 16-year-old high school girl, who in parking her car, stepped on the gas throttle instead of the brake, causing the automobile to run into the side of the building. The damage to the outside of the building was small, but the spices and other stocks received considerable damage and the wall was cracked in a few places on the inside of the store with some glass brick jarred loose at the bottom of the wall. The girl was considerably upset, especially as the car received a wrecked left front headlight, fender and bumper. There were no injuries and no arrests made.
