The latest on Berlin:

Walter Ulbricht, the East German communist boss, predicts this morning the Soviet Union will announce its Berlin intentions this week, but the feeling is growing in the West that Russia is having second thoughts about precipitating a major crisis now.

What's in the wind?

Nobody knows—perhaps not even the communists. But here is an interesting little dispatch that came out of Washington last week: "American officials say they are convinced that one of the principal motives behind Russia's Berlin moves is Khrushchev's intense desire to prove that a communist satellite government CAN MAINTAIN AUTHORITY WITHOUT THE PRESENCE OF RUSSIAN GUNS."

Screwball? Not entirely so. Put yourself in Khrushchev's shoes.

He rules a mid-European satellite empire by cold, brutal force. He is seeking to convince the backward peoples of a large part of the world—including Asia, Indonesia, the Arab countries of the Middle East and most, if not all, of Africa—that communism is a better way of life for them than the way of life offered by the Western nations.

But—He has to contend with the perfectly obvious fact that if Russian troops and Russian guns were removed his satellite empire in Mid-Europe would fly apart like the fabled joint snake.

That isn't just conjecture. It is established FACT.

It was PROVED in Hungary a couple of years ago. Only Russian troops and Russian guns, shooting to kill, held the Hungarians in line. It seems reasonably probable that from what we read and hear that only Russian troops and Russian guns hold the Poles in line.

The Poles are a bold and courageous people. Over the centuries they haven't hesitated to stake their lives at long odds on rebellion against oppressors. But they are also a rational people. They realize that with bare hands they can't hope to win their freedom from communist Russians WITH GUNS.

It's a pretty safe bet that if Khrushchev withdrew the Russian guns from East Germany—which is all of former Germany east of the Elbe river—the GERMANS of East Germany would rise and throw out the communist carpet baggers who now rule East Germany. It is only RUSSIAN GUNS that keep the GERMANS of East Germany in submission.

The myth that the Russian satellite empire in Mid-Europe continues to exist because the people of these conquered countries prefer communism as a way of life is too flimsy for even the Kremlin to believe.

If Khrushchev pulls his troops out of East Germany and relies on the East German commissars to handle the situation, he'll have to send his troops back in again. If and when they came back in they'll have to COME BACK SHOOTING.

Maybe Khrushchev isn't ready for that yet.

West Forms Plan To Stop Ouster

BERLIN (AP)—The Big Three Western powers have formed a plan for firm common action to prevent being ousted from East Berlin, diplomatic officials said tonight.

The top secret plan was drafted within the past few days in diplomatic negotiations among the United States, Britain and France. Senior officials said the plan outlines in detail how the three powers will react if the Russians turn over to the East German Communists control of the vital access arteries to this island behind the Iron Curtain.

Their garrisons totaling 10,000 men are now supplied over rail, air and road links that are controlled by the Russians. The three powers decline to recognize East German authority over these routes.

They are in full agreement, it was said, that they will refuse to accept an East German substitute for the Russians on the four-power Allied air safety center in East Berlin.

This center controls all commercial and military air traffic between West Germany and West Berlin.

The three-power agreement came as Walter Ulbricht, Communist boss of East Germany, said he was prepared to negotiate with the Allies about their access lines to Berlin.

Ulbricht repeated the Communist thesis that the Allies have no legal right to be in Berlin. "There is no legal basis for the presence of foreign occupation powers in Berlin," he said.

But he said there is no reason to fear that the Communists will blockade the city because, as he put it, there exists the possibility of negotiations.

When the Russians carry out their threat to withdraw from the four-power occupation control of Berlin, one of their first acts is expected to be a transfer to the East Germans of control over the surface and air routes used by the Allies to supply their garrison in West Berlin.

Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's West German government wants the Allies then to defy East German control with tank-guarded supply convoys. The Allies more likely will negotiate with the East Germans but only on the basis that they are agents of the Russians. In the Allied view, this would preserve their legal position of not recognizing the East German regime as a legitimate government.
