

PHILIP J. ENGELGAU began work this week as a deputy district attorney replacing John Danman, resigned. The new assistant comes from Portland where he was with the tax department of Crown Zellerbach for three years and previously was with the Commission of Public Docks. Engelgau, who is married and has three children, is 29, a veteran of Army service, was graduated from the University of Oregon and from the Northwest College of Law. He and his family reside at 1711 Burns Street.

PELICAN SCHOOL

Gordon Kensler, director of art education, discussed "What Art Means to Us" at the November 19 meeting in the school auditorium. Kensler, pointing out the necessity of art as a part of everyday living, explained its importance in industrial design, in buying and selling, in homes, in dress and in science. He told listeners that, in the school curriculum, art study is not centered around the talented, but affords opportunity of success to every student.

Kensler brought out the value of art study in the development of discriminating taste; it thus influences production and makes for a wiser use of leisure time. Above all, he said, art teaches the student to think beyond the text book, to help him in supplying his own answers.

Open house preceded the PTA meeting, with a good percentage of parents visiting classrooms.

Principal Charles B. McLin announced that the present school enrollment is 352, compared to 160 eight years ago. He reminded parents of the coming Christmas program, scheduled for the evening of December 12.

Parents from Mrs. Joy Miller's, Mrs. Shermalee Roake's and Howard Storde's rooms served as hosts.
