Tahiti Dish Easy To Do

NEW YORK (UPI)—Mainlanders can escape to Tahiti at mealtime with this Americanized version of "eia ota," or lime-marinated fish, a favorite first course in French Oceania.

Fresh black bass or rock cod are recommended, although a any fresh—not frozen—fish will do.

Using 1/2 pound fish per serving, fillet the fish, cut crosswise in 1/4-inch strips and remove all small bones and skin. Cut strips into 1/4-inch pieces, and add 1 tablespoon salt for each pound of fish.

Cover completely with fresh lime juice and let stand at least three hours at room temperature. Stir occasionally so the marinade reaches all the fish. The acid in the lime juice cooks the fish as thoroughly as heat would, but without any loss of flavor.

When the fish flakes easily with a fork, drain thoroughly and mix with one small chopped onion for each two pounds fish and a generous amount of coconut cream. Garnish with diced tomatoes, chopped green pepper and cucumber and hard-cooked eggs. If desired, some of the garnishes may be mixed directly with the fish.

Coconut cream, home-kitchen style, is made by soaking 2 1/2 cups shredded packaged or fresh coconut in 1 1/2 cups heavy cream for 30 minutes. Simmer 10 to 12 minutes, cool and strain through several thicknesses of cheesecloth, squeezing out as much liquid as possible.

At the current World's Fair in Brussels, the symbol chosen to signify mankind's achievements and hopes is the Atomium, a structure representing nine atoms in a crystal of steel.
