Movie Swaps Next Between U.S., Russia

MOSCOW (UPI) — Russia and the United States will soon face each other in yet another arena—the movie theater.

In a few months, if all goes well, Soviet citizens will start queuing up at box offices throughout the country to see the first American feature films to be shown here publicly—and by mutual U.S. Russian consent—since the end of World War II.

A ticket costing five rubles (50 cents) or less will buy them a glimpse into the fields of "Oklahoma," where "the corn is as high as an elephant's eye," into the Bronx, where a butcher named "Marty" found himself a girl friend, into Ernest Hemingway's story of an old man's struggle with the sea, and into other phases of American life.

Simultaneously, movie houses from New York to San Francisco will herald in lights the arrival of seven Russian films all produced in the post-Stalin period.

The American movie fan's diet will be further enriched by the Bolshoi Theater dancing "Swan Lake," by the "Idiot" of Dostoyevsky and by a drama of war time Russia, "The Cranes Are Flying," which won first prize at the Cannes International Film Festival.

Ever since the intergovernmental cultural accord was signed in Washington last January, the Soviet people have been asking:

"When are we ever going to see your postwar movies? What is a cultural agreement for if not to bring the best of Hollywood to us and show Americans what we have done in the cinema?"

The Russians, like people everywhere, don't like to be told what they should think about the outside world. They prefer to see and judge it for themselves.

The next best thing to traveling abroad is to meet Western tourists in Moscow, read non-Soviet newspapers and magazines, hear overseas broadcasts and see foreign films.

In the past two or three years, the Russian people have had slightly more direct access to American thought and opinion. They not only read Nikita Khrushchev's letters to President Eisenhower, but also what the President says in reply, and in his own words.

Some are able to glance through "America," the monthly illustrated magazines distributed here by the State Department. Others have exchanged words with one or more of the 5,000 or so American tourists who have visited Russia since 1957.

None of these pleasures, however, quite matches that of seeing an American film.

The Russians have seen them before. They remember Deanna Durbin in "One Hundred Men and a Girl," Sonja Henie in "Sun Valley Serenade," Walt Disney's "Bambi" and "Snow White," Charlie Chaplin's early movies and even the exploits of Tarzan.

Occasionally, one of these old American films, some of which were purchased during the 1920's and 30's and others taken as war trophies in Germany, is shown on Soviet television.

But so seldom that it can hardly be said that American films play in the Soviet Union.

This is why the Russians are awaiting that day, probably in January, 1959, when the first of the 10 United States feature movies purchased under the cultural agreement has its premiere in Moscow.

Tourists To Be Studied

NEW YORK (UPI)—The long-suffering American tourist in Europe, looking only for a good time but so often criticized as a boor, was put under the microscope for study.

The investigation to determine "what kind of guy is the American abroad" was launched at the 28th national convention of the American Society of Travel Agents, held in New York Nov. 27.

The convention's aims was "developing better methods of analyzing the American tourist for the benefit of the travel trade" (and) launch a campaign to help government "educate" the traveler to his ambassadorial responsibilities.

According to the travel agents group, half of the 1,500,000 Americans who traveled abroad in 1957 were women housewives, secretaries, clerks and students. About six per cent of the total were in the unskilled labor class. Teachers, students, merchants and engineers made up most of the rest.

The average American tourist today is young, the same source reported, one-fourth of them being between 20 and 29 years of age.

About half the tourists travel alone. One-third travel in family groups; the rest with friends or business associates.
