Top NY Papers Publish Despite Delivery Strike

NEW YORK (AP)—New York's nine major newspapers published today despite a strike by deliverymen in a contract dispute. The lack of distribution services limited circulation to counter sales at the newspaper plants. Members of unions other than the Newspaper Mail and Deliverers Union continued to work generally, although picket lines were set up around some plants. Both morning and afternoon newspapers rolled off the presses about on schedule. Negotiations between the deliverers and the New York Publishers Assn. were scheduled to resume today. The deliverers walked out Tuesday night after rejecting an 877-772 vote contract terms that had been agreed upon by union and management negotiators. The deliverers had struck for eight hours at midnight Sunday but had returned to work after their negotiators approved the proposed pact. The deliverers' strike is not supported officially by other newspaper craft unions. However, a spokesman at the Daily News said that a number of printers scheduled to go to work between midnight and 2 a.m. refused to cross picket lines although reportedly ordered to do so by their shop stewards. One printer who did not report said there had been no order from the union regarding the picket line. The decision to cross or not was by individual choice, he said. Worker absences were not reported at other newspapers. Some editions of morning newspapers already had been delivered to newsstands when the union ordered the walkout. Some delivery trucks rumbled back to garages without dropping off their bundles. Late press runs did not hit the streets. New York's four morning papers, the Times, Herald Tribune, Daily News and Mirror, put copies on sale at their plants. The afternoon papers, the Post, Journal-American, World-Telegram and Sun, the Long Island

Star Journal, were expected to follow suit. The union originally asked for a $10-a-week wage increase, including $1 in fringe benefits, among other demands. The deliverers union struck the city's papers for six days early in 1957. Deliveries to retailers were curtailed. In 1953, six Manhattan papers were closed for 11 days by a photoengravers strike. The seventh paper suspended publication in sympathy with other publishers.

The contract rejected by the union covered two years and provided a $7 weekly increase—$4 the first year, $3 the second—to the pre-strike basic wage of $103.82. The vote against acceptance was 877 to 722. Some 2,000 deliverers are directly involved in the dispute, but all the 4,500 members of the newspaper and mail deliverers union here were entitled to vote. The deliverers struck for the first time in the current dispute at one minute after midnight Sunday. They stayed out eight hours, returning when the tentative agreement was reached. Delivery of afternoon papers Monday was normal. Sam Feldman, president of the deliverers union, said the union would resubmit its original de-
