According to statements made by Taylor, all county taxpayers will receive at least one of the new forms. These are designed so that the taxpayer must give a more detailed accounting of his properties than has been required in former years, and the completed tax form must bear the signature of the taxpayer under penalty of perjury. Tax forms, used in previous years, required merely a statement "to the best of the taxpayers knowledge."

Taylor stated that some of the businessmen would particularly protest the new forms, since for the first time they will be required to give a detailed inventory. More stringent accounting will also apply to farmers and industries. Taylor expressed himself by saying that "It was inevitable that the process of detailed inventories started on timber and improvements should eventually extend to all property." He also added that it was only fair and was something that should have been done a long time ago.

Taylor further mentioned that it was the biggest clampdown in the history of taxation at all levels, county, state and federal, and that it would require more detail and accuracy in filling out the new forms. He announced that the new forms will be mailed out sometime in February to meet the March deadline.
