

Ever Since Noah

COMPANIONSHIP softens life's difficulties and heightens its pleasures—for animals as well as for us. On a Sunday in the Bronx Zoo, you'll see oddly assorted human twosomes viewing equally odd animal pairs. Aside from mutual curiosity, these couples exhibit an even more universal characteristic—the need for togetherness.

Ma and Pa Hornbill take haughty view of human race. Aware of their own good looks, they wonder how people can be so funny.

Photos: Purcell from Three Lions

Romantic Leo croons, "I'll be loving you, always. I'll be true to you, always."

There's not much yackity-yack-yack as these antelopes have a quiet lunch together.

Tiger cubs, sweet and gentle, wonder what it's all about.

This bit of elephantine chit-chat over the back wall was interrupted by some nosy guy with a camera.