New York Makes Bid For Sports

ALBANY (UPI) — New York State is making a determined bid this year to become the major winter sports center of the eastern United States.

The move is a challenge to New England, which has long been regarded as "top" in this part of the country.

The challenge actually got its start last winter with the opening of the multi-million-dollar Whiteface Mountain facility. Spearheaded by ski enthusiast Gov. Averell Harriman, the state's 41 centers began a huge expansion program that has continued quietly for the past several months.

The centers now await only a signal from the weatherman to touch off what is hoped will be a boom season. Aside from the prestige, hotel and motel owners look forward to cashing in on the millions of dollars that tourists will spend for fun and frolic in the snow.

One ski center operator said, "We have the natural terrain, and our weather for the most part has been ideal for skiing, but we've been criticized many times for not having sufficient man-made facilities. Now we're doing something about that."

In the Central Adirondacks, an $85,000 ski center on McCauley Mountain at Old Forge was scheduled for opening on Dec. 20 with a network of new trails, a T-bar lift and a beginners' slope. Snow ridge, at Turrin in the Adirondacks, has undertaken a $50,000 expansion program and has facilities for an estimated 3,000 skiers per hour.

The state's big center at Whiteface Mountain has graded thousands of more feet of slopes and trails.

The expansion and renovating extends all the way from the Adirondacks to the lower Hudson Valley and the Catskill Mountains, to the southern tier and western New York areas, will again thrill spectators at Lake Placid with the traditional two-man and four-man contests. In the Catskills, the eighth annual world barrel jumping contest is scheduled for Jan. 10 and the eastern Olympic speed skating trials for the 1960 world games will be held Jan. 24-25.
