According to announcement from the State Board of Aeronautics, the hearing, scheduled for 8 p.m. in the Kingsley Field lounge at Klamath Falls, is one of a series being held throughout the state for the purpose of reviewing and assessing the efficiency of SAR methods used by the board during the past ten years. William F. Madron of Eugene and Gene Waddell of Portland have been designated as the board's committee to conduct the review and make recommendations. Among areas suggested for discussion are: mechanics of search and rescue, including qualifications of pilots and planes, liaison between agencies and organizations, increased communication facilities, etc.; earlier alerts, requiring more responsibility on the part of pilots in filing flight plans with FFA, possible establishment of a state-operated flight plan system or other means of recording route, destination and time en route, and suggestions to the new Federal Aviation Authority concerning voluntary cooperation of private pilots in air space control in the hope of precluding excessively restrictive regulations.

ments on a broad front stretching from Baltimore, Md., to Norfolk: 1. Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals refused to stay a lower court order directing the admission of four Negro pupils Monday to Stratford Junior High School in Arlington. He did, however, grant Charlottesville a postponement of its desegregation order until next fall.

2. School officials in Norfolk announced plans to reopen six white secondary schools, closed since September, on an integrated basis Monday and called on the public to "show sincere understanding and cooperation to assure a smooth, orderly opening..."

3. Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. rejected the appeals of a segregationist bloc in the General Assembly for approval of emergency legislation that would delay the integration plans in Norfolk and Arlington.

A showdown between the non-integration forces and the Almond administration appeared imminent in the Legislature. At the same time, Alexandria school officials were called on to defend in federal court their rejection of 14 Negro applications for admission to white schools.

Pressure was brought to bear, too, on Warren County school authorities for the reopening of the white Warren County High School at Front Royal. It was closed in September along with the six Norfolk schools and two in Charlottesville by state anti-integration laws since ruled unconstitutional.

Seventeen Negro pupils are expected to enter the six Norfolk schools. Counsel for the pupils said all would report Monday to the schools to which they were assigned.

School Supt. Ray E. Reid of Arlington said Stratford Junior High will open as scheduled Monday. He said that "we have made detailed plans for the opening, and I expect no trouble."

Authorities in both communities warned they would be prepared for any trouble that might develop. Charlottesville's School Board, given 20 days by Sobeloff to submit a desegregation plan to be put into effect in September, planned to meet today and announce a date for reopening Lane High and Venable Elementary Schools on a segregated basis. The schools probably will reopen sometime next week.

A memorandum by Judge Sobeloff in the Charlottesville case said "the plan outlined by the school board will undertake a complete revision of past policies and practices respecting the assignment of children to the public schools and the necessary formulation of new elementary school districts to equalize the pupil population among the various schools."

"The school board's present attitude deserves commendation," Sobeloff added. "It is apparent that the board should be afforded a reasonable time to accomplish the administrative adjustments essential to a positive and effective transition from a racially segregated to a nonsegregated public school system."

Alexandria school officials were prepared to go before Judge Albert V. Bryan in Alexandria for a review of the 14 applications they turned down last week on grounds the Negro pupils did not qualify under the board's seven-point pupil placement plan.

Counsel for the National Advancement of Colored People asked Warren County school officials for a quick answer whether the high school at Front Royal would be reopened now that the state school-closing law has been knocked down. School authorities plan a meeting next week.
