Demand For Oil Gains Over Past

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH,
United Press International

NEW YORK — (UPI) — Oil men expect the demand for petroleum in the U.S., which burns roughly half the oil consumed in the Free World, to rise four to five per cent during 1959.

After that, they look for demand increases to level off at about three per cent annually to meet anticipated rises in industrial activity, population and the number of cars and trucks on the road.

During 1958 domestic demand continued to go up — as it has in every post-war year — but by only two per cent, against the four to five per cent annual rate of increase in the post-war decade. Oil men were most optimistic in discussing foreign demand prospects. There they foresee growth at three times the U.S. rate.

Where they are least optimistic is in the field of public relations. Frank M. Porter, president of the American Petroleum Institute, says here the outlook is "the worst I have seen in 42 years of association" with the industry.

Only a solid front of opinion and action, he says, can save the 27½ per cent depletion allowance, stop the "twisting of anti-trust laws against the industry and prevent increased Federal gasoline taxes as a means of shoring up the highway trust fund."

The depletion allowance is a tax concession enacted in 1926 to stimulate the search for oil. It permits an oil and gas producer to deduct 27½ per cent of his gross income from a producing property with the restriction that it may not amount to more than half the net income from the property.

In an attempt to counter a possible anti-business trend, the Gulf Oil Corp. announced plans last September to take an increasingly active role in practical politics. Price prospects for petroleum products started improving in mid-1958 as inventories came more into balance and demand swung upward.

However, J. C. Donnell II, president of Ohio Oil Co., says domestic crude oil prices in 1959 will continue to come under pressure from great supplies of petroleum being developed overseas.

The average U.S. crude oil price already has been shaved from $3.10 in October, 1957, to around $3 currently.

To help out domestic producers the government has been imposing voluntary import quotas. However, despite these quotas, imports in 1958 amounted to roughly 10 per cent of domestic production, against about six per cent 10 years ago.

Many oil men believe that because of prospective increases in petroleum demand both in the U.S. and abroad, present import restrictions may be unnecessary later than 1965.
