Voices from the gallery

UNLIKE SMALL BOYS who draw mustaches on works of art, Bob Reisner and Hal Kapplow know what they like, and they resent being told what to think about masterpieces of painting and sculpture. So in their recently published "Captions Courageous" (Abelard-Schuman, $2.50), they cast inhibitions to the wind and wrote down what the masterpieces might say if they could speak for themselves. Here are a few samples of the "captions courageous" from their hilarious book.

"You make a left turn when you reach Broadway."

"I can only give you a dollar on this."

"No machine, please, just the scissors on the side."

"Who's minding the store?"
