Students Seek More Degrees

OREGON STATE COLLEGE — Just as more American high school graduates are going on to college now than ever before, so are more college graduates going on for advanced degrees, a report prepared by the Oregon State College graduate school shows.

In the past 12 years, graduate school enrollment at OSC has doubled with a record 689 students—or about one out of every 12 on campus—working for master's and doctor's degrees this year. During the 1958 summer session, almost 1,000 students were enrolled in the graduate school.

Vastly greater numbers are seen in years to come with opportunities bright for women as well as men, according to Dr. H. P. Hansen, dean of the graduate school. The record enrollments are signs of the nation's tremendous need in industry, government, and education for highly trained specialists and teachers, Hansen noted. New developments in scientific fields are requiring new and higher levels of training.

Almost half of the graduate students at OSC, 330, are majoring in science fields. Agriculture is next with 135 students; engineering, 58; education, 44; home economics, 27; forestry, 20; pharmacy, three. On a departmental basis, chemistry is the leader with 40 students enrolled in the doctor's degree program and 53 working for master's degrees.

More women are encouraged to consider study for advanced degrees. Home economists with advanced degrees, for example, are in tremendous demand for teaching and research positions and fine opportunities for women are found in many fields of science, he said. Seventy-nine women are included this year in the 689 graduate student group at OSC.

OSC offers doctor's degrees in 70 fields of study through 29 different departments and master's degrees in 90 fields and 42 departments. Last year, OSC conferred 41 doctor's degrees and 276 master's degrees.
