

DINNER IS SERVED—Hitting the chow line, sage of Neu-Fall an der Isar, in West Germany, them in the snow-covered terrain near the vil more than 200 deer are eating hay set out for them. The usually-shy animals paid little attention to the spectators on hand who came to watch them as they ate hungrily along the Isar River in the Bavarian Alps.

IT CAN BE DONE—Although the tug boat strike in New York was a hindrance to shipping, it did not halt all activity. The American Banner Lines S.S. Atlantic is shown as she left for Europe without benefit of the small boats considered necessary.

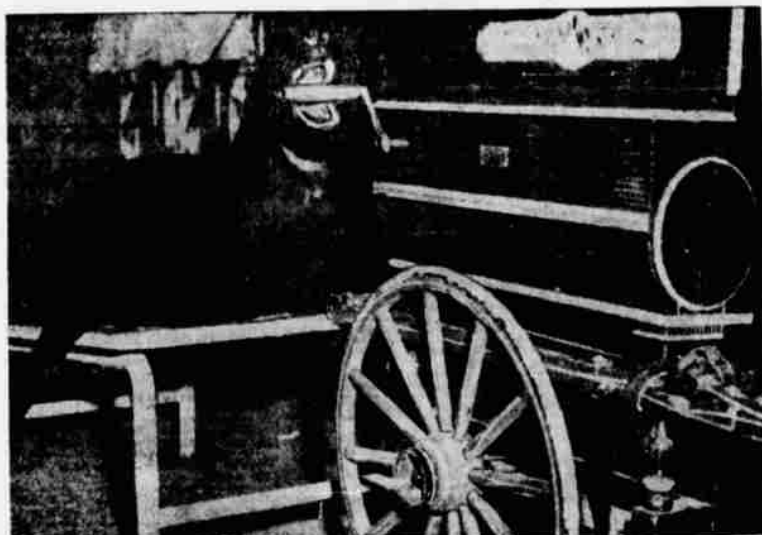

LIFE GOES ON—Even when streets are covered with water, people of the flooded town of Villeneuve Le Roi, France, go about their business as best they can. One man is poling a boat along a street that resembles a canal in Venice (top photo). Up the Seine River a few miles from Paris, this town was among the hardest hit. Below, parents are placing children in a boat that will take them to their school.

LUCKY PIERRE—As he works amid a trio of models in his Paris salon, the life of a French fashion designer might seem to be nothing but fun. However, Pierre Balmain is merely making a routine inspection of some of his styles. He is sending a collection of gowns on a 'round-the-world tour, which is being sponsored by the Australian government and the mother-of-pearl industry.

ON ITS WAY—Come summer, and the two-piece bathing suit may be right back in style. This one is a compromise between the daring bandanna bikinis—prohibited on most public beaches—and the conservative two-piece of other years. Joan Faye illustrates the effect in gold printed satin at Miami Beach.

ORGAN GRINDER—Oscar, a trained seal who's performing with a French circus in Paris, seems to play by mouth rather than by ear. He's really having more fun than any organ grinder's monkey as he earns his fish snack by doing stunts like this one.

GOOD BUSINESS—Customers are performing the happy task of serving themselves in this pub in London, England. During alterations, the beer taps were placed on the other side of the bar, and the owner has found it advisable to leave them there in the future. He claims business has increased 50 per cent since the change was made.

FLAPPERS—You'd guess twice before you came up with their names, but they're actors Jack Lemmon (left) and Tony Curtis. They're dressed up in this feminine finery in Hollywood for some scenes in "Some Like It Hot," in which the boys co-star with Marilyn Monroe—who, of course, is real.

WINTER FAIRYLAND—Cold weather freshness gets a romantic touch when a heavy snowfall covers picturesque towns like the historic city of Michelstadt, in Germany's Odenwald Forest. The unique town hall in the picture is the oldest building of its kind in the country.

HERE'S TO YOU!—Sweet singer Dian Parkinson is blowing a kiss to the camera as she jets New York to pay back to her TV shows in Hollywood. She was in Manhattan to do a TV show with her former husband, who is now a successful actor.

CONTRAST—A young man in Paris seems to be dressed for warm weather, but his knees must be mighty cold as he surveys the snow-surrounded Carrousel Arch in the French capital. The shorts he's wearing can't be much protection from wintry blasts. This arch is near the Louvre Museum, at the other end of the Champs Elysees from the Arch of Triumph.

TOP HEAVY—Balancing a toy koala bear on her head, pretty Pamela Margaret McKay, of Brisbane, Australia, attended a press conference in New York. Pamela won a contest to benefit cerebral palsied children in her country, and the prize was a trip to the U.S.
