Enjoying her first piece of home-made taffy, a Lyons, Kans., woman bit into something hard. It was the diamond from her ring which had fallen out as she was pulling the taffy.

A shepherd near Cheyenne, Wyo., deaf since World War I, was struck by lightning. When he regained consciousness, he found that he could hear again.

In Capetown, South Africa, a woman killed her last turkey so the family could stave off starvation. In the gizzard she discovered eight gold nuggets valued at close to $100. Later she found where the turkey had been eating—it was a bonanza!

Fifty years ago an Omaha, Neb., resident was bequeathed an old-fashioned musket by his father. In dire need recently, he decided to clean and sell it. In the barrel, he found several thousand dollars.

The wife of an unemployed salesman bought a cheap ring from an antique shop for her daughter's birthday. When the girl cut a neat hole in the window pane with her gift, the mother had it appraised. She sold it for $750.

A group of New York women, gathered for a charity meeting, found they had $16,540 in cash they couldn't account for. The money, in $50, $20, and $10 bills, was discovered crammed in paper cups purchased at an auction. With no claimants, it was turned over to various charities in the city.

A Boston detective, shot through the chest by a bandit, is alive today because his heart was on the right-hand side. He had never known it.

A blazing oil well near Moab, Utah, abandoned to burn itself out, was smothered when a workman accidentally dropped a tubing head that helped cap the well. The freak capping brought the workman a handsome reward.

Exploding ammunition served as a fire alarm which saved the lives of a young husband and wife and their three children.

Their home caught fire and exploded a shell in the closet which awakened them.
