I Just Keep Plugging Along

We have electric gadgets
Of every sort—a fryer,
An automatic washer,
A mangle and a dryer,
Hot water heater, mixer,
Disposing unit, toaster,
TV, a vacuum cleaner,
A waffle iron, a roaster,
Electric range, dishwasher,
Two radios, a freezer...
In fact, my wife is blessed with
Just everything to please her!
The only lack observed by
This critical appraiser
Is one remaining outlet
For his electric razor.

When I first gazed upon it;
Now suddenly it's fraught with news—

I've just dumped garbage on it!

A haughty tourist from Boston visited the hacienda of Don Miguel south of the border. The tourist had tried to awe people throughout Mexico with his ancestry but without much success. Don Miguel, though, looked like he might be impressed with blueblood.

"You know," the tourist said, "my ancestors came over on the Mayflower." He smiled indulgently. "But then I suppose you'll tell me your ancestors rode with Noah in the Ark."

"No," Don Miguel replied. "They had a boat of their own."

The Boy Scout troop was on an overnight encampment. One youth, sooty and disheveled, reported to the Scoutmaster soon after arrival. "Parker," said the Scoutmaster, "I thought I told you to light the oil stove in the cook tent."

"I did," the boy said, "but it went out."

"Well, light it again!"

"I can't. It went out the roof."

"Tsk, tsk," said the minister sadly when he met the young divorcee at whose wedding he had officiated, "to think that the good ship matrimony, launched under such auspicious circumstances, should come to grief upon the ugly shoals of divorce. Tell me, dear, what caused this tragedy?"

"Well, Reverend," sighed the young lady, "I guess you might say the ship was undermanned."
