Chief Of County Schools Discusses Bills In Salem

Current measures before the Legislature which relate to Klamath County were discussed by Carroll Howe, Klamath County school superintendent, before the last meeting of the Klamath Falls Soroptimist Club. Olive Cornett, chairman of the day, prefaced her introduction of the speaker by quoting from recently published figures which show that Oregon's cost of $365 per school child is the highest in the nation. Howe discussed H.B. 314 which would increase the state basic school aid from the present $105 to $120 per child, adding that it seems unlikely that this measure will pass because of lack of over-all tax program. House Bill 94, which also provides for an increase, has had several changes regarding the distribution of funds since it was introduced, the speaker stated and is causing less controversy than S.B. 485, introduced by Sen. Walter J. Pearson of Multnomah County. The Pearson bill calls for a three per cent sales tax to provide $150 per school child. The measure also calls for reduction of individual income tax and reduction of property tax up to approximately 40 per cent. If passed by the Legislature, it would be referred to the people for vote and would not become effective until July 1, 1952. The bill states that all excess funds would go into the state's general fund. Howe called the measure "very realistic." He also commented on H.B. 41 which would exempt county unit counties from the reorganization bill, saying he still has "hopes of seeing it pass."

During the question and answer period the subject of federal aid for the children of military personnel was raised. Howe stated that a maximum of $207 per child is provided for when the increase in school enrollment, by reason of incoming children of federal employees including military, reaches three per cent. Children who are enrolled even on the last day of the school year can be counted, he added. Copies of the legislative calendar and of various Senate and House bills and amendments were distributed about the tables by Mrs. Emil Albrecht, club president. Most of them had been provided by Mrs. Cornett, through the courtesy of Sen. Harry D. Boivin's local office. Mrs. Albrecht asked the members to make it an individual project to sign and return the bal-

Cartons made by Weyerhaeuser do the job of delivering your milk

Eleven Weyerhaeuser plants serve the dairy industry throughout the nation. They produce attractive gable-top milk cartons that feature a concealed, sanitary pouring spout. The containers conserve refrigerator storage space and may be discarded when empty. Dairies in the Northwest are serviced by our Kieckhefer-Eddy Division milk carton plant at Vancouver, Washington.

Cartons that mean jobs for Northwest people

About two years ago, Weyerhaeuser expanded into the manufacture of milk cartons, shipping containers and folding cardboard boxes. The Company now has 34 converting plants throughout the United States.

One of the purposes of the expansion was to carry forward our policy of working to utilize our wood supply more completely and to convert it efficiently to its highest use. The converting plants use paperboards produced in company pulp mills, located principally in the Northwest.

Business expansions in the forest industry have a stabilizing effect upon employment and economic conditions in this region. They support markets for Northwest forest raw materials.

Forest industry research is producing a similar effect. This activity leads to new and improved products that result in new or expanded payrolls. Research also helps to maintain sales in the face of increasingly intense competition, thereby supporting jobs in various phases of production.

As a whole, the forest industry uses many tools to utilize and perpetuate its timber resources, thus adding to the permanence of its operations. By growing timber as a crop and by developing and marketing more products from the trees harvested, the industry will continue its important contribution to regional stability and prosperity in the years ahead.
