Many Animals Find Home On Ranch

MOUNT SHASTA—Three miles northwest from Mount Shasta, El Rancho Chiquita attracts more attention than many other livestock spreads that cover sections of ground, although El Chiquita measures only one and one half acres. The small ranch with the delightful name is home for more than 400 assorted members of the animal kingdom. Ranch owner A. A. Raines states that there are more New Zealand white rabbits than any other variety of livestock. White guineas are next in point of numbers, with pheasants, chickens, ducks, geese, peafowls and a few hybrids making up the balance. Like all ranches, there must be a champion. A bantam rooster claims that title at this place. He won it by beating a cock pheasant after giving away weight, and being the underdog in the betting. El Rancho Chiquita is popular with its dwellers. Many can, and do, fly over the stockade. None ever leave. They know that here the feed is good, the hours delightful. Why go off into unknown space?

Forest Road Construction Begins Again

ETNA — After the winter shut-down, construction work on the third portion of the 32-mile-long, multi-million dollar United States Forest Service access road between Callahan on Scott River and Cecilville on the South Fork of Salmon River has been resumed by the Humboldt Construction Company of Eureka. The road crosses the Salmon Mountain Divide at an altitude of about 6,500 feet and cuts through extremely rough mountain terrain on the north side of the East Fork of the South Fork of the Salmon River. It follows the trail scouted by 1850 pioneers. The forest covers 112,596 acres in the South Fork of Salmon River area, and the 7,242 acres in the Salmon-Trinity Alps Primitive Area, being opened for logging and recreation by the Klamath National Forest, is estimated to contain more than two billion board feet of marketable ponderosa and sugar pine, Douglas and white fir and incense cedar. When the two 12-mile road is completed to Cecilville, the timber cut, it is estimated, will be between 25 million and 30 million board feet per year. At Six Mile Creek, which is approximately two-thirds of the way to Cecilville on the new road, it is reported that an estimated 12 million board feet of mixed pine and fir timber will be offered for sale in June by the forest service. The road is expected to be completed to Cecilville this year, making one of the remotest areas in Siskiyou County easily accessible.
