

PARTY GOING RICHNESS of this frock comes from the lovely textured Sanforized cotton fabric. The dark two-toned plaid has an overlay of gaily colored, miniature daisies to brighten the darkest stripe. It is simply styled with a cool, cutaway neckline and short sleeves for comfort on warm summer evenings.

Beat The Rest To Summer Jobs

It's never too early to look for a summer job. Let the procrastinators reap the "job filled" slips. Early birds deserve their rewards.

If you organize your job hunt now, you'll be ahead all along the line—you may get a choice of jobs, you will have time to create a "captivating" letter to employers and to interview prospective employers before you make a decision. If you wait, chances are you'll take the first thing that comes along, and then if you've made a mistake, you're stuck.

One of the great buys for the money is the newspaper ad. It is the way to reach the person you are trying to attract, a more direct method than canvassing organizations willy-nilly. Even if a job is placed with an agency, chances are the personnel manager looks at the "work wanted" classifications in the paper.

Other good job possibilities may be available through friends of the family. If parents suggest that you write to these people, don't be shy about it. They wouldn't advise it unless they felt your effort would be welcome. And sometimes these friends may have good suggestions to make, even though they cannot hire you themselves.

If you plan to advertise, consider the specialized job and you will surely get responses.

Cat sitting, dog walking, bird and plant feeding may give you an enchanting new slant on work. An ad in your local paper probably will locate the people who need your talents along those lines. If you love animals you could include grooming services—brushing and bathing dogs, clipping parakeet nails, changing aquarium water. Some people love pets but can't bear the chores.

Another way to work outdoors is to take care of gardens. Gardeners are expensive and hard to find. Many people would like to keep up their gardens, but just haven't the time or energy.

You could work up a good business by taking orders for annuals, raising them from seed, and then supervising the gardens you contract to oversee. This is especially important service for people who do not like their gardens to go to weed while they are on vacation. You could specialize in roses, taking care of rose beds for people who want that kind of service.

A student who is proficient in a language could serve as tutor to small fry. One young girl made a handsome sum last summer teaching conversational Spanish to four children who were going to live in South America. Their parents were too busy to devote their time to the project, but wanted their children to have a reasonable acquaintance with the language before they left the country.

There are always the routine jobs, of course—filing, typing, stenography, telephone operator, selling. Big companies often are your best bet on these jobs as they are willing to be contacted early, and if they are not ready to make a decision will put your application in the priority group if you are suited to the job.

The girl who speaks another language in her home—Spanish, French, Portuguese, Norwegian or other—may be surprised at the number of opportunities open to bilingual students.

The Mature Parent
Often It Takes More Than 'Serious Little Discussion'

By MRS. MURIEL LAWRENCE "serious little talks." Since their need to display their superiority to us is stronger than their reason, their ears are closed to reasonable words.

The TV psychologist had received a letter from a viewer. In effect it asked, "What can I do about my mother-in-law? She's always picking on me before my children. This is encouraging them to question everything I say so that I get arguments from them constantly."

The TV psychologist started broadcasting her reply. In her studio complicated machinery began turning her words into wave patterns which other complicated machinery in our TV sets promptly changed back into words.

The answer resulting from all this electronic activity was this: "Why don't you have a serious little talk with your mother-in-law, pointing out what her picking on you is doing to your parental authority?"

It seemed to me a waste of the electronic activity. People who want to undermine our parental authority are seldom deflected from their purpose by

"serious little talks." Since their need to display their superiority to us is stronger than their reason, their ears are closed to reasonable words.

So if we're obliged to maintain contact with such people, our solution is not asking them to stop criticizing us but changing our own response to their criticism.

When our mother-in-law finds fault with the way we're preparing baby's vegetables or dealing with Tommy's defiance, faultfinding disturbing?

Isn't it our expectations of faultless performance from ourselves? Of course it is. If we didn't feel we should be able to provide perfect meals for baby and always be ready with the exact answer to Tommy's defiance, our mother-in-law's suggestion that our methods are faulty wouldn't disturb us.

It certainly isn't pleasant to have this critical lady around—but the thing that makes her intolerable is our own secret need to appear always perfectly right.

LEMON JUICE

To get the most juice from lemons, heat them quickly in hot water for several minutes before squeezing. Rolling to soften also is effective.

FOLD CLOTHES LIGHTLY

After sprinkling clothes for ironing, fold them lightly so that you do not create extra creases and wrinkles to iron out.
