County Agent Reports

Farm News Briefed From The County Agent Radio Programs

By RAY O. PETERSEN

Several beef and swine producers attended the field days held at Oregon State College Monday and Tuesday. College personnel discussed the research work that is being conducted at the campus and throughout the state with beef and swine production problems.

Oregon has lots of barley and an effort has been made to improve its feed value as livestock feed. Corn is higher in total nutrients than barley and usually produces faster gains in all kinds of livestock. Some trials have shown that the addition of enzymes to barley in poultry rations made it nearly equal to corn. One college trial was conducted to determine the value of enzymes, malt and soaking barley to improve its feed value. Corn was also fed one lot as a comparison. Neither the enzymes or the soaking made any appreciable improvement but the addition of 2.5 per cent malt did increase the rate of gain and reduce the feed required for one pound of gain.

A great deal of the effort being put into beef and swine improvement is directed at developing animals that are more efficient in the utilization of feed, reducing the cost of producing meat and in producing the kind of meat the consumer prefers.

Beef feeding trials not only include studies on rate and efficiency of gain but the effect of the feed or additive on the flavor and tenderness of meat and also the proportions of fat and lean resulting from the different feeding methods.

The Food Technology Department conducts these meat quality tests. One recently completed was a check on the affects of stilbestrol hormones on flavor and tenderness. The techniques used did not show any detectable difference in meat from treated or untreated beef animals.

Swine producers and research workers are concentrating on developing hogs and feeding methods that produce pork with a minimum amount of fat. To do this, breeding stock and market hogs are fed at testing stations where the rate and economy of gains of each individual is determined and the quality of the carcass of market hogs from the same litter. Two of the most important features of the carcass is the size of the loin eye or pork chop and thickness of back fat. In one test which included what was thought to be some of the best hogs in the state of Washington, it was found from 2.7 square inches to 6.2 inches. The hogs were practically the same weight. Back fat thickness varied from 1.2 inches to 1.6 inches in the hogs under their test.

Beef producers who are attempting to improve their cattle by selecting cattle that grow faster and still hold the most desirable conformation are in the process of setting up a performance testing association in the state. The main feature of this program is to get cattlemen to weigh and grade the calves as weaners and yearlings and feed bulls to select cattle that are fast gaining, make economical use of feed and produce a desirable carcass. A meeting will be held June 1 at Redmond to consider a suggested performance testing program. Any cattlemen interested is invited to attend.

WHY WASTE TIME?

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI)—Arthur Fromen, 47, was out on bail pending appeal of a conviction on charges of passing bad checks when the FBI arrested him—on a bogus check charge.
