Artist Invents Piano-Guitar

ATLANTA (UPI) — An Atlanta man has crossed a small piano with a singing guitar—and come up with a "plectronic piano."

William B. Taylor is the inventor of this unique instrument that looks like a miniature baby grand, but sounds like an electric guitar. Taylor's plectronic piano is played just like a regular piano. The big difference is that when the key is depressed, the strings are plucked instead of hammered. A small metal device at the back of each key plucks the strings as the key is struck.

Taylor's first model used piano strings, but the wire was too heavy, giving the instrument too much overtone. Guitar string wire is used in his present model. An electronic system is built in for volume.

The inventor cut and fashioned his own wooden keys and covered them with ivory. The instrument is housed in a delicate, highly polished birch case.

Taylor, a commercial artist, says he got the idea for the plectronic back in 1926 when he was strumming a guitar with a Dixieland Jazz band in New Orleans. He decided to build an instrument that combined the good points of the piano and the guitar. He started work on his first plectronic a few years later.

Tagged Sail Catch Made

MIAMI (UPI)—When Ross McClure of Dayton, Ohio, hauled in a sailfish off Delray Beach, Fla., this season, he learned he had actually recaptured a fish that was first caught three years ago only to be sent back to sea.

What told him this was a dart-shaped tag which McClure discovered almost hidden beneath marine moss and goose barnacles. The tag was placed on the sailfish as part of a program initiated by the University of Miami's Marine Laboratory in 1956.

The purpose of this project is to learn about the movements and growth of sailfish. Of all the fish tagged, only nine have been recaptured.

McClure's quarry had been tagged off Islamorada, Fla., on February 19, 1956, when its weight was estimated at 20 pounds and its length at six and a half feet.

When he recaptured it, the fish had grown to a length of seven feet, one inch and weighed 46 pounds.
