

Judge Ponders Decision On Whether To Free Long

GALVESTON, Tex., (AP)—Gov. Earl K. Long of Louisiana, who says he wants to return to his home state and enter a New Orleans hospital, was back in a Texas mental clinic today for at least another week while a judge pondered whether to free him.

District Judge L. D. Godard said Monday night after the habeas corpus hearing he felt more time should be spent studying the case before he ruled on it. He ordered Long back to the mental clinic while he delayed his decision one week.

Judge Godard also announced postponement of today's sanity hearing after a conference with Probate Judge Hugh Gibson. The sanity hearing also was moved back one week.

Sen. Russell Long (D-La.), the governor's nephew and son of the late Sen. and Gov. Huey P. Long, disagreed.

"It seems to me a very crucial point has been overlooked," said Sen. Long, who attended the hearing but was barred from testifying by court order.

Attorneys for Gov. Long asked the court to bar those representing Mrs. Long from testifying. Mrs. Long did not appear in court.

Sen. Long told newsmen after the hearing the point he had mentioned should have been clear to anyone, even those with no legal training.

There were obvious political implications in the senator's appearance in court. He has hinted he might seek the governorship.

Gov. Long, leaving the courthouse, yelled: "Still in jail. Still in jail. Texas style."

Earlier, he said: "I don't belong in an asylum."

He said if he had been freed, he would have entered Ochsner Hospital in New Orleans.

If he had gotten back to Louisiana, he said, he probably would have vetoed some bills. In Long's absence, acting Gov. Lether Frasier Monday signed or vetoed the last of the bills passed by the Louisiana Legislature, which adjourned a week ago.

In his petition for the writ of habeas corpus hearing Long said he was a "governor in exile by force and kidnapping." He charged he was drugged, tied to a stretcher and carried aboard a National Guard plane for the flight to Galveston May 30.

Judge Godard asked Long if he wanted to testify.

"At the suggestion of his three court-appointed attorneys, Long answered: 'I believe it would be better if I didn't testify. I sometimes get a little excited.'"

However, as expected, the often tempestuous governor broke into the testimony at times. His interruptions were calm, usually drawing smiles.

RUSSELL PENGELLY

Basin Tutor Wins Award

Russell Pengelly, a teacher of general science at Fremont Junior High School for the past seven years, received notification Thursday that he is a winner of a National Science Foundation stipend that will cover eight weeks' training institute schooling this summer.

The stipend is worth up to $1,000. It covers all expenses that Pengelly is likely to incur while studying at Oregon State College. He was one of 97 teachers, from 19 states, 57 of them from Oregon, who received the grant. His stipend comes from $111,500 granted OSC by the foundation to conduct the institute from June 22 to August 14.

The federal grants were instituted several years ago to stimulate better training of high school science teachers. Grants for study of biological or physical science or both. Pengelly has tentatively chosen a curriculum including botany, chemistry, recent advancements in physics and astronomy. The courses will net him 12 hours of college credit.

Pengelly will teach science at Burns High School next fall.

House Members Hold Meet On Foreign Aid Slashes

By EDMOND LE BRETON WASHINGTON (AP)—House members who want less money spent on foreign aid mustered today in an attempt to cut another 300 million dollars from the proposed program.

The $3,642,600,000 authorization bill before the House already represents a cut of $266,800,000 from President Eisenhower's recommendations.

Rep. Alvin M. Bentley (R-Mich.), a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, said he is drafting amendments to the bill to reduce its total to about $2,300,000,000.

Supporters of foreign aid registered an impressive margin—377-95—Monday on the preliminary vote whether the House should take up the bill. It raised their hopes of warding off any further deep cuts—at least until the separate legislation actually appropriating the funds provides another test.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee brought out, meanwhile, its own version of the bill with a total authorized spending even higher than the amount Eisenhower asked.

But it voted for Treasury borrowing authority rather than direct appropriations to finance the Development Loan Fund, a procedure Eisenhower has directly opposed. And it tied restrictions to some other presidential requests.

The Senate total was $4,164,520,000 compared with $3,930,000,000 Eisenhower asked. Of that, one billion dollars would be provided through the Treasury for the Development Loan Fund, designed to finance special loans to underdeveloped nations unable to borrow otherwise.

Eisenhower asked 700 million dollars for the loan fund. The House bill would authorize 800 millions.

The Senate committee voted the full amounts Eisenhower asked for military aid and for defense support. The House bill would cut both amounts.

For military aid, the Senate group voted $1,600,000,000, but earmarked all but 500 millions of that amount for North Atlantic Treaty countries. That would give NATO 223 millions more than Eisenhower proposed. Another 96½ millions would be authorized for Latin American countries, but only 65 millions of it could go to individual nations. The remaining 31½ millions would be contributed to an international police force if the Organization of American States sets up such a force, or else diverted to economic aid to Latin America.

The senate committee voted 15-2 to cut 20 million dollars from the 200 millions Eisenhower asked for a contingency fund, and trimmed his 271-million-dollar request for special assistance to $244,620,000. The Senate is not expected to act on the bill for several weeks.
