

Ancient British Order Of Druids Welcome Summer In Pagan Revelry At Historic Stonehenge

AMESBURY, England (AP) — Frolicking teen-agers and college students outdid the Ancient Order of Druids today in welcoming summer at Britain's historic Stonehenge.

Some 2,000 boys and girls, fortified by whisky, gin and beer, staged a pagan revel around the great stone slabs in southeast England believed to have been raised by sun worshippers about 1,500 B. C.

White-robed, solemn-faced Druids — members of a fraternal order — annually greet the sunrise at Stonehenge on June 22, the start of summer. This year the young folks came hours earlier and got a head start.

A glowing full moon rose over the downs while hot and fast Dixieland music provided an obligate to the dancing, shouting and laughing students.

Silhouetted in the moonlight, a pretty blonde whipped off her blouse and bra. Bare from the waist up, she danced a happy live amid sprawling young people, many entwined in embraces.

At 4 a. m. 14 Druids arrived in the midst of the revel.

At the head of their column was a tall sheeted man carrying a sword. Behind him a lady Druid held aloft a banner. Bringing up the rear was the chief Druid, holding a shepherd's crooked staff.

Flanked by policemen, they marched around the circle of 16-foot high stones. Hundreds of youths flocked along.

"If you think you are going to see a circus," boomed the chief Druid, "you are wrong."

"This is a serious, solemn ceremony which you would understand if you had the intelligence to understand."

A boy with black hair stood up and flapped his arms, yelling, "Omno washes whiter," the slogan of a well-known British detergent.

"I ask for reverence," pleaded the chief Druid, "if you've got any reverence in you."

Empty bottles littered the place.

About 25 youths lay motionless on the ground, sound asleep.

By this time, heavy clouds had drifted across the dawn sky and the Druids and everyone else were robbed of the opportunity of seeing the sun rise over Stonehenge's

It had been a hectic night, but no arrests were reported. Finally most of the teen-agers and Druids drifted off toward Amesbury, some three miles to the east, for breakfast.

Young Father Kills Stepson

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP)—A youth told police Sunday he placed his 18-month-old stepson in a tub of scalding water and calmly washed a sinkful of dishes while listening to the child's screams.

Tony Ray East died Saturday of second and third degree burns which covered most of his body.

Police charged the stepfather, Leroy Joseph Rideaux, 19, with murder.

The Negro youth told Medical Investigator A. A. Martindale the incident occurred last Tuesday when he returned home from work. He became angry, he said, when he tried to feed the child grits and the child spat them out.
