

Fragrance News

The fragrance news of summer. It's nice to know, includes refreshing, delicious scents ranging from those with a noble background of over 60 years, to those as modern and sophisticated as the last cable from Paris, all by Harriet Hubbard Ayer.

In the former category are fragrances identified with Mrs. Ayer from the "Age of Innocence," when she was pioneering in the beauty field at the turn of the century. It is hard to realize now what courage it took to compete with the perfumes of Paris when she originated "Honeysuckle," a nostalgic, honey-sweet odor that will bring a sigh of remembrance to many a grandmother of today, but also has a definite appeal to young moderns. It suggests the vine-hung porches of Old New England on a drowsy summer afternoon when bumblebees were buzzing in the honeysuckle blossoms and Stutz Bearcat waited at the gate. Ah, romance!

Another long-loved fragrance of that era is "Pink Clover," a clean, fresh, charming scent of blossoming clover under a hot June sun. It is said that Mrs. Ayer was enchanted by discovering such a field during her girlhood in the mid-West, and resolved to capture its charm. Whether or not she found a four-leaved clover on that occasion, the perfume brought her good luck.

In strong contrast to these fragrances is "Golden Chance," modern, sophisticated and high-keyed. Its elegance is admired on four continents and it is one of the golden high-notes in the modern symphony of perfumes that combine rare floral essences with aphrodisiac elements, to achieve an exotic "bouquet." Some of the most important components of this type of fragrance come from such difficult areas as the high plateaux of Tibet, the hazardous depths of Africa, the jungles of South America. To achieve a fragrance such as "Golden Chance" is not a mere matter of picking a bunch of flowers. Danger goes into its creation and is somehow conveyed by its beauty.

Another very smart and subtle fragrance is "Woody," one of the modern Harriet Hubbard Ayer triumphs, well-named because it gives the impression of wild flowers, ferns, deep forest fragrances and a haunting, hard-to-define, top-note suggesting strange fruit, green moss, bird-songs and a hidden, silent pool.

These two smart fragrances involve rare ingredients ranging from the Himalayas to the tropics, yet they are within the reach of every woman in the modern, handy, Ayerist packaging. Both are strictly modern, very high-style, extremely appealing, yet completely distinctive.

"Golden Chance" is packed in a black and gold Ayerist bottle, "Woody" in appropriate green, but the famous "Honeysuckle" and "Pink Clover" come in their traditional packaging of gold and pink respectively. When the last two made their debut as sensational "made in America" perfume, modern bath luxuries were unknown, but now the colognes have matching Bubbling Bath Oil and Dusting Powder and Mrs. Ayer, a push-over for luxurious bathing, would have loved them.

ICE CREAM

Treat the family tonight to homemade ice cream. This delicious "Golden Fruit Ice Cream" is smooth and rich with a wonderful and fine color—canned fruit cocktail. In this recipe, canned fruit cocktail is sieved or pureed in an electric blender before combining with the other ingredients. For an exceptionally colorful and delicious dessert, you might serve scoops of this ice cream in sherbet dishes, with a topping of chilled well-drained canned fruit cocktail. Looks festive and tastes wonderful!

GOLDEN FRUIT ICE CREAM
1 (No. 2 1/2) can fruit cocktail
3 tablespoons honey
1/4 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon finely grated orange rind
1 1/2 tablespoons brandy
1 cup whipping cream

Drain fruit cocktail, saving syrup. Blend fruit cocktail until smooth in electric blender. Measure; if necessary add enough syrup from fruit cocktail to make two cups. Stir in all remaining ingredients and turn into freezing tray. Freeze until nearly firm; turn into chilled bowl and beat until smooth with electric mixer or rotary beater. Return to freezing tray and freeze until firm.

Makes about 1 quart.
Note: Instead of using blender, fruit may be forced through a coarse sieve.
