Actor Finds Fans From Underworld

HOLLYWOOD (UPI)—What kind of people do gangsters admire? "Actors," says Lloyd Nolan, a veteran villain of the stage, screen and television.

"Those tough guys are almost like kids when they run into an actor," he said. "They take you in and can't do enough for you."

How come?

"Mainly," said the gray-haired, balding actor, "because we have achieved legitimately what they want most of all—recognition."

"Recognition is why they wear flashy clothes, get themselves seen with dazzling dames and ride around in big cars. Unfortunately, it's the same thing some kids do for recognition."

Nolan, a 55-year-old native of San Francisco, said that sometimes a gangster's hospitality can prove embarrassing. He recalled an incident in a New York restaurant several years ago:

"I was with Victory Jory, another actor, and he introduced me to a couple of these mugs. They were almost like the movie version. One was a slick looking hood, and across the table was his beady-eyed little lawyer."

"I finished dinner, and I wanted to leave, but the slick guy said, 'Where ya going?' I said I thought I'd like to leave, and he said, 'Whatta matter, don't ya like my company?' I said, 'Sure I do.' And he said, 'Then stick around.'"

"He asked me how I liked the four dames they had with them, and I told him I thought they were swell—although they were real bags. He said, 'Which one ya like?' I said, 'Well, they're all swell.' And he said, 'You want all of them? They're yours.' Finally, I explained I had to leave to do a show, and I got out."

Hospitality in Hollywood—especially among actors of different income brackets—is not always so warm, said Nolan, who is currently starring as a tax agent in the TV series "SA (Special Agent) 7."

"It's almost like the social register and those below it," he said. "Actors in 'B' pictures just don't get invited to the parties thrown by the producers of 'A' pictures, and they don't get asked to as many premieres."

Nolan, a former "B" picture actor who is now one of Broadway's and Hollywood's top stars, explained:

"It's not a snobbish thing at all. It's just that people feel easier with friends in their own income bracket. They can feel more comfortable talking about the same places they visited in Europe."

"You see, the very essence of this business is competition of personalities—not products. It's not like selling something in a store or a restaurant. You're always selling yourself."
