NO MORE SHOVELS?—Army mechanical ditch digger is tested at Ft. Belvoir, Va. It could scoop out battlefield trenches and fox holes in minutes. It can dig a trench four feet deep and two feet wide at the rate of 12 feet per minute.

Irish Colleens Tire Of Waiting For Slow Hubby

DUBLIN (UPI) — Good wages, bright lights and wedding bells are hiring Ireland's colleens across the Atlantic — and Eire's bachelor surplus doesn't like it at all.

The steady flow of young girls to Canada and the United States has posed a problem, one that the reluctant male dislikes but, apparently, is not prepared to solve.

Government officials believe the emigration trend is downward, but there are no reliable figures to support this.

One factor causing concern is the traditional slowness of Irishmen to take brides. "Sure, he's only 30 years of age," is a common cry. "He's still a bit young to get married."

For years, Premier Eamon de Valera has been trying to break down this idea, asking elderly farmers to hand over the land to their sons so they could support a wife.

It hasn't worked that way. Today, sons and daughters on Irish farms still must work as unpaid laborers. They get pocket money for a Saturday night, but very few are in a position to set up on their own.

Inevitably, many girls get tired of waiting. Prospects of an early marriage across the seas has denuded the rural areas of young women.

In Britain, the U. S. and Canada these girls get married and write home, telling of the wonders of the new world and urging others to follow.

A drive to make Ireland's rural areas more attractive has been launched by the government with the help of parish councils. Dance halls, social meeting places, cinemas are springing up around the country to provide the long-awaited "city attractions" the girls have been hankering after. But the problem of the reluctant male can't be settled by government planning. Traditionally cautious, the Irishman sees no point in "rushing" into marriage. A magazine summed it up with a cartoon showing a young farmer talking to his girl friend: "I'll marry ye yet, but not for 10 years time," was the caption. "There's no need to be in a hurry about these things."

Forest Tax Study Set

OREGON STATE COLLEGE — Forest taxation and its effects upon the management of Oregon forests will be studied in a new Oregon State College school of forestry research project.

Forest economists at the college have outlined a broad research program to determine the effects of Oregon's property tax, yield tax and severance tax on forestry operations.

Because of the scope of the project, it will be conducted over a period of several years. First of the studies to be instituted will be an analysis of the property tax burden on forest owners in relation to other property holders. This phase will start this summer and may be completed within a year. Other phases of the project will be undertaken as funds are received.

Working on the project will be Robert F. Keniston, Charles F. Sutherland, Dwight S. Jeffers and Charles W. Dane of the forestry school staff.

The great interest in forest taxation is shown by the number of forest tax bills introduced in the 1st Legislature, the foresters noted. Facts developed from the research are expected to provide new and highly valuable information on forest taxation and management in the state.
