Glamour Found On The Beach

Time was when we couldn't look glamorous on the beach if we planned to celebrate the outing in safe and sane fashion. Newer beauty props have changed all that.

Instead of greasy sun lotions, unattractive sun shades and ill-fitting bath robes all designed to protect us from overdoses of sun, we now have some gay and fashionable clothes and accessories that give a new look to the beach.

Plain folk can look as if they were accustomed to holidaying on the Riviera, what with portable beach cabanas and portable cooking units available within the price range of most American vacationers.

Beach hats have taken on special glamor and are so attractive that they may go from the beach to smart luncheon spots with ease. Some of these have openings at the crown where sun lotion, glasses, cleansing tissues, and skin cleanser may be kept conveniently.

Sunglass designers have whipped up, eye-catching styles. This year you are in fashion if your sunglasses are big, bold and round-shaped in black or white nylon frames, the perfect complement, 'tis said, for tanned skin.

New oversized beach bags that can be used for everything from carrying sandwiches to totting baby gear are other good bets for picnic convenience. These come in handy too, for weekend trips—easy to pack, easy to carry and attractive.

One Unselfish Thought Bears Bountiful Fruit

GUERNSEY, Channel Islands—Five years ago a little girl picked a wild primrose—a single primrose that has blossomed into an amazing organization called the Love Apple League.

It has no membership fee. It has no membership card. It has no patrons. No executive committee.

It's run by children. And, it lives on an unselfish thought: Children shut away in hospitals, far from sunny fields, should have flowers.

The girl who did the first picking was named Garth. She was playing with another girl named Gillian.

Garth stood holding the primrose, looking about her at Gillian and thousands and thousands of primroses on this flowery island.

"What a wonderful sight," gasped Garth. "A million flowers," said Gillian.

"Wouldn't all children love to see them. I wish we could send just hundreds of them to children lying in hospitals."

"I know it would make them feel better," said Gillian. "Let's pick them," said Garth. "Hundreds of them."

"How're we going to get them to the children?" "I don't know," smiled Garth. "but let's start picking."

Laden with armloads of primroses the children staggered home with their fragrant load and showed them to their father.

"Look," they chorused, "we've picked them for children in hospitals. How can we get them there?"

"Let's take them to the airport," said the father. So, they and the flowers went to the Guernsey airport.

There they spoke to the first man they saw—Herbert Hill, manager of the airport restaurant. He listened to their story.

"Come with me," he said, making his way to a waiting airplane.

"Captain," asked Hill, "these little girls want you to take these flowers to England—to sick children in English hospitals. Can you do it?"

"I can and I will," he said, loading the primroses into his aircraft.

He flew directly to Birmingham in Britain's industrial midlands. He personally took them to a hospital for children.

Two days later the letters of thanks began to arrive in Guernsey.

"Dear Children," one of them began. "Thank you very, very much for the flowers. It was a beautiful idea. The flowers are so beautiful, too."

"Your flowers are brightening our ward. It gives us great pleasure just to look at them and sniff."

"We are already feeling better."

"Maxine Smith of Ward 6."

Hill looked at the letter and smiled.

"Now, Garth and Gillian," he said, "you've started something."

They had, too. The idea spread. Other Guernsey children began collecting flowers and bringing them to the airport.

The pilots fell in with the idea. Flowers started being delivered all over the world.

"You need a name for your organization," suggested Hill. "Now, what'll it be?"

The tomato is Guernsey's main fruit. They are shipped everywhere. The children wanted to connect the flower-sending plan with the tomato. But how?

Finally they settled on the tomato's ancient name—Love Apple.

That's how the Love Apple League got started. Now it has important links all over the world and is even a corporate member of the United Nations Organization. It has more than 1 1/2 million members in 20 different countries.

PATRICIA MILES, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jess Miles, Fort Rock, will be 4 years old on July 14. She finds it a special treat to walk a short distance through the junipers to the home of her grandmother, Mrs. K. O. Buick, who moved a few months ago to Fort Rock from her home in Klamath Falls.
