

POSING FOR THEIR PICTURES is not a long suit with Shetland ponies. Sparky, at right, as head of the family, came to oversee this operation. The spotted colt was still hungry and the little horse colt in the background was rubbing noses with the black mare standing directly in front of Prancer. There are only three more colts which can be purchased this summer on the Jennings place and one is going to turn out to be a beautiful black, the family predicts.

PRANCER, a 4-year-old mare, has a spotted horse colt which will be sold by Clarence Jennings when he is weaned. The Jennings colts are permitted to remain with their mothers until they are about 7 months old. Although they start eating solid food long before that, he feels they get a better start in life if not weaned until after six months. "None of these mares will wean their own colts," he commented.

SPARKY, five-year-old Shetland stallion of the Clarence Jennings' herd, is red sorrel with white mane and tail. Standing 40 inches, he is a gentle, affectionate pet of the family. Since a small colt, he has developed one trick of his own. He will rear up, getting his fore feet as high as Jennings' belt, so he can nuzzle his master's collar.

THERE WAS A GUEST for lunch when Otto Ellis took this picture of Tilly, a black Shetland mare. Her little filly had invited a friend over for refreshments and the patient mother was not objecting. After several tries at a head-on picture, the photographer had to settle for a shot from the rear.

Take Me To Your Pharoah

DENVER (UPI) — Dr. George Hunt Williamson thinks spacemen have been dropping in on earth people for the past 5,000 years — and on a regular basis. The 32-year-old archaeologist told a recent meeting of the Denver Society for Unidentified Flying Objects Investigation, Inc., of indications that ancient civilizations made UFO sightings similar to those reported today.

"There is evidence from ancient Egypt, Rome and Greece and Indians of both North and South America to indicate there were sightings of strange objects," Williamson said. "We can't prove it but I think space ships did exist then and do now."

Williamson said ancient carvings in Latin America indicate the work had to be supervised from the air in order to be so symmetrically perfect. Other evidence he cited was a 5,000 year-old map showing mountain ranges no longer in existence — "this work could not have been done except from the air."

Williamson admitted he had "never seen a true space ship or talked with any little green men." He also conceded there is a "lunatic fringe" among flying saucer addicts and that many UFO sightings can be explained away.
