

Icelandic Fish May Soon Appear On US Shelves As Trade Agreements Loom

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — Iceland has fish for sale. If it has its way, the United States will buy a lot of it and thereby help this nation, a link in the North Atlantic defense system, build its economy and diminish any dependency on the Soviet Union.

A group of frozen food experts here from the United States agreed that the Icelandic fish is fine tasting food.

"We'll buy all we can get, just freeze it right, package it right and make the price right," said Walter Meier, frozen food broker from Milwaukee.

Meier indicated the flow of Icelandic fish to the United States may be stepped up considerably. The government invited Meier, Dave Elgren of Salt Lake City, Brock Steel of Orlando, Fla. and others to investigate the possibilities.

As it stands now, the United States seems to have won the battle for Iceland's political support but the need is to cement the thing from an economic viewpoint. The fishing industry, representing 97 per cent of Iceland's exports, is the key.

Government people say the foreign reserves accruing from work on the NATO airbase are useful but they want American support for the island's principal economy and the one it will have to live on under all circumstances, cold war or peace.

Says the Foreign Office through its varying officialdom: "Back up the fishing export market, help us build roads, power plants, industry that will go forward eternally." Officially the government cannot say these things, Icelanders being too proud to hold out their hands, but this is what they believe.

American State Department people here take the view also that the ups-and-downs of military spending at the air base disrupt the economy in the sense that one year 15 million dollars may be spent and the next year only 7 million. That is because military planning has to be what it is.

Ambassador John J. Muccio, here almost five years, has tapped Icelandic thinking. Muccio and his energetic staff have captured the respect of Icelandic officials.

Today one-third of Iceland's fish are going eastward to the Soviet Union, East Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia. The United States is taking about 15 per cent. West Germany and Scandinavia about 10 per cent each. From the Western nations, Iceland gets something it can use. From Poland it is receiving Polish vodka and the Icelanders don't much need anything more to drink. Czech light bulbs arrive and explode when inserted. Soviet gasoline is still the only valuable import from the East. Americans on duty to protect Iceland buy for their cars gasoline that comes from Baku, U.S.S.R.

A battle with Britain over the cod, haddock and herring catch limit. The British refused to how to the order and sent in 12 warships, a task force of 5,000 naval men, to protect its trawlers. The British patrol was enough to keep West Germany, Belgium and the Soviet Union out of the waters. Five Icelandic motor vessels badger any British trawlers they run into in so-called "poaching pockets."

An Icelandic government authority commented sardonically: "We didn't plan it that way but the British are now patrolling 90 per cent of our waters at no cost to us by keeping the Russians, Belgians and Germans out. We can take care of the remainder."
