NY Lawmaker Convinced Rockefeller Undecided

WASHINGTON (AP)—A lot of people may be skeptical, but Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-NY) says he's convinced Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller hasn't made up his mind about 1960.

Javits said Rockefeller's flying trip to Washington Tuesday was a mere scratch-the-surface affair without too much political significance.

In the course of the day, Rockefeller talked with President Eisenhower and other government officials on civil defense matters, and met with GOP office holders both in Congress and in the administration.

Some supporters of Vice President Richard M. Nixon thought the interest Rockefeller showed in primaries confirmed their belief that he already is a candidate—though unannounced—for the 1960 Republican presidential nomination.

Sen. Styles Bridges (R-NH), with whom Rockefeller talked about next March's New Hampshire primary, left no doubt he thinks the governor is headed for a contest with Nixon in that state.

But Javits said that if Rockefeller really was set to go after the prize, he doesn't think the world long would remain in ignorance of the governor's intentions.

"I know him pretty well and I sense that he is going through a period in which he is trying to make up his mind," Javits said in an interview. "He may appear indecisive now but when he makes up his mind you won't have to ask him what his intentions are, he'll tell you."

Rockefeller appeared to be bent on making friends—if not necessarily on influencing them—in appearances sandwiched in between business talks with Eisenhower, Secretary of the Treasury Robert B. Anderson and Leo Hoegh, the civil defense administrator.

At a White House conference after his 45-minute talk with Eisenhower the governor took the opportunity to shake hands with all the newsmen present.

When he visited the Capitol for lunch with Javits and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-NY), some of the gawking tourists might have wondered if a presidential nominee was on the premises.

Rockefeller had a grin and an outstretched hand for everybody, including Republican and Democratic senators who converged on his table. He signed autographs for tittering girl secretaries, shook hands with the Negro waiters and generally acted like a goodwill ambassador for Rockefeller.

But Javits insisted this was merely Rockefeller being himself and not Rockefeller, the incipient candidate.

Expectant Elizabeth Makes Queen-To-Mother Change

By TOM A. CULLEN

LONDON (NEA)—With the announcement that she is expecting a baby early next year, Queen Elizabeth II ceases to be a remote, glittering symbol.

To millions of her subjects, she becomes a radiant woman looking forward to one of life's most joyful events, the birth of a child.

This transition from the symbolic to the simple is one that never fails to impress the foreign observer; in her person the Queen fuses the two roles perfectly.

American commentators have been quick to note the restraint with which the news has been received here, the absence of public demonstrations. But to the British this seems natural.

The public rejoicing will come the day the Queen's third child is born. Then the church bells will peal, and the Thames reverberate with the 41-gun salute from the Tower of London. Then there will be champagne and dancing in the street.

The announcement throws new light on the arduous, 16,000-mile tour of the Canadian provinces which the Queen completed in 45 days.

Britons can fully appreciate the ordeal it must have been for the 33-year-old Elizabeth in her delicate state. They are awed by her physical endurance, as well as by her courage.

During the tour the Queen often worked a 12-hour day.

Moreover, her Canadian travels took her to extremes of altitude and temperature, always trying for a woman in early pregnancy.

"I thought she was going to collapse. . . . She only kept going by will power. . . . She is desperately fatigued. . . . These phrases from press reports now take on a new meaning.

Prime Minister Diefenbaker, when informed of the Queen's condition, at once suggested that she cut short her tour, but the Queen was determined to carry on, knowing how a cancellation would disappoint millions of Canadians.

These qualities of courage and firmness of mind are earning new respect for Her Majesty. They show that she has reached maturity and that she has a mind of her own.

They have also restored confidence in the future of the British monarchy, which has been buffeted by political storms for the past 20 years.

The abdication on December 1, 1936, of Edward VIII, now the Duke of Windsor, shook public confidence in the monarchy like no other event in modern times.

Nor did the accession of George VI, father of Queen Elizabeth, fully restore it. George VI had never wanted the job, and his natural shyness plus his stammering speech made his public duties agonizing.

Elizabeth II came to the throne following the tragic death of her father in February, 1952. She came

Petrol Firm Aids Victims

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Continental Oil Co. contributed $10,000 Wednesday night to the Greater Kansas City fire disaster fund, started to aid victims of Tuesday's disastrous gasoline fire.
