Top Democratic leaders, including Gov. Edmund G. (Pat) Brown, generally agree about that today. But his very success sharpens the dilemma that now confronts the Massachusetts senator. Should he enter the winner-take-all California primary next June and go for its glittering 81 votes in the Democratic presidential nominating convention?

The question pivots on another: Is he strong enough to beat Brown? Some California Democrats say he is. Others are dubious. Kennedy himself said he would be "reluctant" to enter the primary. This, in spite of the compliments echoing here as Kennedy headed into Oregon today.

"He had a big success," said Brown. "I admire him very much." But the governor said in an interview it has not caused him to reassess his own position. He says almost all the party leaders in the state want him to go to the convention as its "favorite son."

"A highly successful trip," said State Chairman William Munnell. "He made many, many friends in California." "The most effective campaigning he's ever done in the state," said Paul Ziffren, national committee man.

Kennedy drew big crowds at almost every stop. They grew visibly warmer as he spoke. The re-
