FOUR-FOOTED PATROLMEN

by OMER HENRY

IN JANUARY, 1957, the Baltimore Police Department adopted a new anticrime weapon. This was an original and dramatic move, for no other city in the United States had tried out this means of fighting crime.

During the first month of its operation, the city's crime rate fell 26.9 percent below that of the same period in 1956. And for the entire year of 1957, while the national crime rate was higher than in 1956, Baltimore's figure was 13 percent lower.

Is this new weapon very expensive? Happily, it isn't. Its total added cost in Baltimore during the first year of its operation was $13,670.

Better still, this anticrime weapon is available to every town and city in the United States—and at a similar low rate.

What is it?

The K-9 Corps. This consists of Maj. L. Wilson Davis, 21 regular police officers, and 21 husky, well-trained German shepherd dogs.

The Baltimore Police Department has learned that nothing on earth will strike fear of the law into hoodlums like a 140-pound German police dog triggered to snarl, pursue, leap, and bite.

How did the K-9 Corps originate?

In December, 1956, a Baltimore newspaper printed an article about the use of police dogs in London. Rex, one of the animals, was instrumental in the arrest of 120 individuals. During 1956, London's 300 dogs aided in arresting 1,168 lawbreakers.

Shortly after the article appeared, Police Commissioner James M. Hepburn let it be known that he was considering using police dogs in Baltimore. Major Davis volunteered to put the program into effect.

The skillful trainers of Baltimore's K-9 Corps teach dogs uncanny control. The moment an order is issued they obey.

For more than 20 years, Major Davis had been interested in obedience work with dogs. During World War II he set up the Marine Corps dog-training program and served as officer in command of the Marine Corps War Dogs, Fleet Marine Force Pacific.

Major Davis invited all members of the police force to volunteer for work in the K-9 Corps. He explained that he would accept only men who were genuinely interested in the program and had good records with the department.

"I made it clear," he says, "that the officer would be responsible for the care and training of his dog and that the two would work together as a team."

Since the dog was to live at the officer's home, Major Davis selected only policemen with adequate yard space to house and care for a dog. "Also," he says, "I made certain that the officer's wife thoroughly approved having a dog at the house."

Many policemen applied for transfer to the K-9 Corps, and Major Davis carefully considered each applicant. The best trainers, he knew, are men who have worked with dogs. A high percentage of the really superior trainers, he says, come from farms where they have handled hunting dogs.

Major Davis approved for transfer to the K-9 Corps only men with high intelligence, excellent character, outstanding physical ability, and a definite skill with dogs.

Baltimore has a powerful new anticrime weapon—its K-9 Corps

"We had plenty of pedigreed dogs offered to us," he says, "so we could afford to take only the best. We chose male German shepherds which were alert and capable of being trained readily."

By the middle of January, 1957, Major Davis had 14 officer-dog teams in training.

K-9 officers teach their dogs to be obedient—to heel, sit, lie down, stay in position, come when called, be gun-sure, and attack and release on command.

"It is extremely important in attack training," Major Davis explains, "that the dog attacks only on command and releases instantly on order."

After completing his basic training, a K-9 dog learns to trail human beings and to locate articles which may be used as evidence.

IN TWO MONTHS, all 14 officer-dog teams were on duty in those sections of Baltimore where assaults, purse snatchings, and muggings were most prevalent. And seldom a day passed but what the dogs proved their worth. For instance: "I had just arrested this man," a K-9 officer says, "and opened a call box to get a patrol wagon when the criminal broke and ran. Rocky jumped, struck the prisoner in the back, knocked him down, and guarded him until I arrived."

Primarily, an officer-dog team works on foot, the dog on a leash except when released to apprehend a wanted individual. This gives the dog an opportunity to start an investigation on his own.

That happened at 1:20 in the morning when officer Calvin Fillings and his dog Major-2 were patrolling an area in the vicinity of Johns Hopkins Hospital. Fillings noticed a parked truck but saw nothing about it to arouse suspicion.

Not so Major-2. He started pulling toward the truck, bristling and growling. Fillings followed the dog and found a man huddled out of sight in the driver's seat.

As the officer opened the truck door, the man slipped out of the cab at the far side and started to run.

"Stop," Fillings shouted, "or I'll release the dog."

The man stopped at once. He confessed that he had gained entrance to the truck, tampered with the ignition, and actually had moved the vehicle several blocks.

On another occasion, six men were engaged in a street brawl when Patrolman Cortez and his dog 3-D approached them. Seeing the officer and the dog, the men ran. "Stop!" Cortez ordered, but the men only ran faster.

Releasing the dog, both 3-D and Cortez gave chase. By the time Cortez had one man, 3-D had rounded up three of the offenders and located a fifth man cowering under a car. Only one man got away.

This then, is Baltimore's new anticrime weapon in action. The K-9 Corps has taken over some of the city's worst trouble spots. Aware of this fact and that the program is succeeding, many other cities are considering adopting it.

"Possibly the greatest value of the police dogs," says Major Davis, "lies in their mere presence on the street. The psychological effect has been tremendous, and their deterrent effect on crime cannot be measured. You can argue with a police officer, but not with his dog."
