

Survey Pact Concluded

SALEM, Ore. (AP)—Gov. Mark Hatfield announced Thursday night an agreement for a joint general conservation survey in Oregon has been concluded with the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Donald A. Williams, the department's Soil Conservation Service administrator, said the agreement with the Oregon Water Resources Board was the first of its kind in the nation.

The survey of water and soil conservation will be centered in the Upper Willamette and Deschutes River basins, Hatfield told a meeting of the Oregon Assn. of Soil Conservation Districts.

Williams said the department has conducted many unilateral surveys elsewhere in the nation, but this is the first conducted jointly with a state.

The survey is aimed at developing information on the amounts of water available and needs, physical opportunities for installing facilities in the basins and broad economic aspects for developing the potential of the basins.

All this would aim toward a coordinated development of water resources of the two basins, Hatfield said.

Road Group Okays Budget

SALEM (AP) — The Oregon Highway Commission Thursday adopted a budget of $93,333,000 for 1960, or 13 million dollars less than the commission is spending this year.

The budget includes 50 millions for construction, compared with 77 millions this year.

State Highway Engineer W. C. Williams said the cut is caused by new procedures in contract letting that are required by the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads.

These procedures, he said, are putting Oregon's highway program six months behind, and that it will take about three years to catch up.

The new budget includes 43 millions of federal funds.

The commission approved a plan for an $80,000 project to beautify the proposed East Bank Freeway, which will carry the Pacific Freeway through downtown Portland along the Willamette River.

The project calls for a 45-foot planted strip between the highway and the river. The state will pay $60,000 of the cost, the city of Portland $20,000.

50 Persons Join Church

Optimism over progress and future of the evangelistic crusade now under way in the First Christian Church in expressed by the church leadership. Evangelist Medford Jones is bringing the messages.

Otis R. Bell, pastor, reports that at least 50 members took part last week in the visitation program and as a result of these calls, 50 persons were committed to membership in the church. A similar number is expected to affiliate during the remainder of the crusade which will terminate November 13.

Children's meetings conducted this week by Evangelist Jones, assisted by Arlene Skaugset, local religion education director, have broken previous records with children of many of the town's churches participating.

These meetings have been of a non-denominational status and officers of the Christian Church have expressed belief that they have been helpful to the spirit of goodwill among the churches. This same result is noted in the evening meetings with persons of other churches attending.

Pastor Bell states that Evangelist Jones enjoys the reputation for being the outstanding evangelistic speaker among the brotherhood of Christian Churches.

He has conducted crusades in 33 states with meetings involving several churches in an area conducted simultaneously. The Christian Church invites all to share in these services nightly except Sunday. Time each evening is 7:30. Those who love sacred music are invited to the 7:15 p.m. concerts preceding the service.
