Many Groups Fuse Efforts For Survey

Numerous groups in the city and county are getting behind the drive to raise money to make a survey of this area's hospital needs, according to Greer Drew, chairman of the board of governors hospital fund committee of Klamath County Chamber of Commerce.

Klamath Union High School Future Nurses will be out in pairs on Saturday in downtown and suburban Klamath Falls to sell tickets to the benefit dance to be held November 21 under the sponsorship of all union crafts of the area. The girls will be identified by badges, Drew said.

Herbert Waites, president of the Central Labor Council, reported Wednesday to R. Frank Tucker, chamber manager, that his committee has sold approximately 1,800 tickets to the dance and additional tickets have been ordered.

The local Carpenters Auxiliary will hold a benefit at the Labor Temple on Saturday evening, starting at 5:30 p.m. There will be a potluck supper, open to the public, to be followed by cards and games. Further information may be had by calling the carpenters local union at the Labor Temple.

Tucker reports that the Fairhaven PTA decided this week to hold a carnival at the school during hours prior to the benefit dance on November 21. The PTA plans to share the proceeds with the hospital survey drive.

On Thursday, Tucker was slated to present a money-making project to the Soroptimist Club's weekly luncheon at the Winema Hotel with an idea of the club's sharing in the drive.

Both Catholic Mothers and Catholic Daughters organizations have asked for suggestions of ways they can add to the fund, Tucker said.

American Education Week: Our Role in World Affairs

Editor's Note—This is another in the series of articles evaluating our educational system during American Education Week. It is written by Mrs. Phillip (Isabelle) Brinker, Klamath County supervisor of elementary schools and president of the United Nations organization.

By ISABELLE BRINKER

How to teach our young people and adults seriously and realistically—not superficially—about other countries, other peoples, other ways is one of the most difficult problems facing our schools. Newspaper headlines, focusing on one crisis after another, testify to the urgent need for such teaching if American voters are to make enlightened decisions on world problems.

Our schools are promoting better understanding of the world in many ways. Regular current event and world affairs courses are well known. Special projects of all kinds, from talks by foreign visitors to panel discussions of world problems to art exchanges with other countries, help give students a broader outlook on the world in which they live.

THE INTERNATIONAL Relations League is a state-wide program sponsored jointly by the University of Oregon and the Oregon Education Association. The local chapter at KUHS has 30 active members who are concerned during the year with various phases of international problems. Each year representatives attend the state conference at the University of Oregon in February, taking part in discussion of a state-wide topic. During recent years two model United Nations meetings have been held. Klamath Falls has provided two state presidents of the International Relations League, which is now 13 years old.

Klamath Falls students take part in the International Art Exchange, through which paintings and drawings by American students, depicting their life here, are sent to foreign countries. Paintings from these lands are then sent here, for exhibition in our schools. Of the pictures sent from the Pacific States area for the 100 picture collection last year, four were from Klamath Falls. Promotion of this program is by the Junior Red Cross.

Language opens doors of communication on a person-to-person basis between peoples of alien cultures. It is necessary to speak the language of a country if you would know that country and achieve some understanding of its ways.

Many students write to pen pals in other lands. The letters, telling as they do of school affairs, hobbies, home activities, likes and dislikes, hopes and dreams, prove again that children the world over are basically alike.

The United Nations will come in part.

MORE THAN 300,000 elementary school children in more than 2,000 public schools in the United States are being taught a foreign language. Foreign language courses are common in our high schools. New teaching methods, tape recorders, films and records are making modern foreign languages more inviting to students in many schools.
