Thanksgiving, 1959

FREEDOM of worship is enjoyed throughout the nation and this typical American family leaving Kingsley Field Chapel is that of Captain and Mrs. John F. McCaffrey. The family, which often attends Sacred Heart Church in Klamath Falls, includes, in front, left to right, John, Paul, Kevin, and in back of them, Mary Ellen and Maurice. Baby Kathy is carried by her mother.

TURKEY and trimmings on Thanksgiving Day will not interest young Ray Curtis as much as the familiar bottle held by his mother, Mrs. Jack Prock. His parents, however, will long remember the day and give thanks for this first Thanksgiving with their son.

ENTERTAINING is noteworthy among American families and Mrs. Adolph Zamsky, left, is often a gracious hostess to members of the family on Thanksgiving Day. Here she puts final touches to a centerpiece assisted by two pairs of willing hands, those of her daughter, Valerie, and son, Steven.

THIS YEAR will be the family of Dr. and Mrs. Fred Wedem thankful for their first Thanksgiving in a new home set deep in pine trees in the Pine Grove District. Animals and birds, frequent visitors in this wooded area, are watched with interest through large picture windows by the four Wedem children, seated on the floor of the living room, left to right, Jack Martin, Albert (Bubbi), Toni Jene and John Dene.

THANKFUL for the opportunity to shop for the items needed for a bountiful Thanksgiving dinner is the Dr. Arthur Compton family. A turkey, which will be accompanied by all the trimmings, is held by Mrs. Compton for the approval of her children, left to right, Jack, George, Linda and Bill, who couldn't resist "seeing with his fingers."
