

Milwaukee Braves' Star Makes Plea For TB Seals

The following letter has been received at the office of the Klamath County Tuberculosis and Health Association from Alfred "Red" Schoendienst, 1959 national honorary Christmas Seal chairman, a well known baseball figure who established major league records while playing for the St. Louis Cardinals and the Milwaukee Braves.

"I'm greatly honored to serve as your national chairman for the 1959 Christmas Seal campaign," Schoendienst wrote, "and gratefully for the chance to help make this year's sale another pennant-winning year for the St. Louis Cardinals."

"Even before being named chairman, I had a pretty good idea of how much the seals mean in the fight on TB. More than 10,000 people wrote me at the hospital after the '58 World Series. They said they were rooting for me and many of them added that they were taking extra seals this year to help fight tuberculosis."

"Since becoming campaign chairman, I've learned a good deal about how TB associations operate—especially about our way of raising funds. I think it's great! Sending Christmas Seal letters right into the home gives us the chance to ask everyone to help fight TB—and there's no high-pressureing of anyone."

"Of the many things I've learned since becoming chairman, the most impressive fact was that over 110,000 volunteers devoted hours of their time to last year's campaign. As a fellow who's had TB, I know that your efforts to help other people are really appreciated."

Schoendienst has played in 10 all-star games, chalked up more than 2,000 hits, batted in more than 1,000 runs. A series of X-rays taken in October, 1958, gave the first hint of TB, and he entered a hospital in November for further tests when the diagnosis was definitely established. Surgery on one lung was performed in February of this year. On March 24, he was able to leave the hospital and return home to complete his recovery.

Former Solon From Oregon, Holman Dead

EUGENE, Ore. (AP)—Former U.S. Sen. Rufus C. Holman of Oregon, flamboyant congressional isolationist before and during World War II, died here Friday. He was 82.

He suffered a fatal heart attack at the home of a stepson, Ernest Lundeen, where he had spent the Thanksgiving holiday. Holman served in the Senate from 1939 through 1944, when he was defeated in a bid for the Republican renomination by Sen. Wayne L. Morse, now a Democrat.

In that period Holman was a member of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, now the Armed Services Committee. He was closely associated with such isolationists as the committee's chairman, Sen. Robert R. Reynolds of North Carolina, and the late Sen. Ernest Lundeen of Minnesota, whose widow later became Holman's second wife.

The three senators bitterly fought both the New Deal domestic program and the foreign policy of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Morse made this the issue in his campaign against Holman in the 1944 primary. He won only after a close, bitter contest, the first ever lost by Holman in a long Oregon political career.

During his one term he was one of the Senate's most colorful figures. He loved the pomp of the Senate chamber and, on days he was going to speak, Holman, who had a thick head of snow white hair, would appear in a swallow-tail coat.

He relished his Senate service to the end. Sen. Richard L. Neuberger, Oregon Democrat, said Holman kept in steady correspondence with him, using Senate stationery which Neuberger provided annually.

He made one late bid for a comeback. He organized in 1947 the American Foundation Inc. the purpose of which, he said, was to expose the "Roosevelt conspiracy." Holman did not say what that was but said he shared the beliefs of John T. Flynn.

In the fall of 1945 Flynn wrote a series of articles blaming the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941 on President Roosevelt, whom he said had decided in January of that year to go to war.

The aging Holman and a handful of associates never got American Foundation Inc. off the ground.

Although a conservative in later years, he launched his career in politics as a liberal.

In the late 1920s he was elected in Portland to the board of county commissioners. Later, strongly backing federal power projects like Bonneville and Grand Coulee dams and public utility districts, he was elected state treasurer as a backer of another liberal, Gov. Julius Meier.

CHAMBER COMMENTS

by GEORGE T. CALLISON
Assistant Mgr.
KLAMATH COUNTY
CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

For the last two weeks, this column has been devoted to a discussion of the 16 principal causes of consumer complaints and dissatisfaction in business transactions. Today we'll run through the remainder of this list which was compiled recently by the National Better Business Bureau.

Problems sometimes arise because a person buying merchandise on an installment contract fails to understand that the seller has the privilege of selling that contract to a third party without informing the buyer. This first introduction to financing matters is often a painful experience which the purchaser long remembers. He should fully understand this bank-merchant-buyer relationship, and the rights which he retains in the individual contract into which he is entering.

Along this same line, trouble often develops because the buyer does not understand the difference between interest and finance charges. Failure of the customer to request itemization of charges plays into the hands of unscrupulous operators who "pack" the charges with various cuts, splits and rackets. When installment contracts are entered into, customers should be given an itemized list of the various charges.

Purchasers often fail to check the reputation of promoters, or to investigate fly-by-nights before buying or placing orders. No one should ignore this basic maxim of sound practice. In other words, "Before you invest, investigate."

Prospective purchasers sometimes fail to obtain bids or even estimates in writing before authorizing work. Written estimates based upon stated specifications protect both the buyer and the seller from misunderstanding.

It is an interesting fact of buyer psychology that people frequently dislike to spend money for the apparently intangible service offered by lawyers. And yet obtaining legal advice before making a purchase of a home or other major expenditures constitutes a very cheap type of insurance against pitfalls in such transactions.

A lot of dissatisfaction and disillusionment can be avoided if the buyer will be wary of appeals to his sympathy or greed. Sympathy appeals are a time-worn method for getting people to part with their money and, of course, all of the "something-for-nothing" propositions are based on an appeal to the greed of the prospective victim.

Unethical advertisers sometimes make airy promises and predictions about future matters over which they have no control. It's a sure source of a complaint when the buyer accepts such promises or predictions of the future as representations of material facts.

When things go wrong with products, some careless users are ready to blame everybody—except themselves. Actually, the buyer is often to blame because he has ignored instructions for use and maintenance of the merchandise. The merchant seeking good customer relations will, when necessary, supply full instructions for the use and maintenance of the merchandise he sells.

And finally, the 16th source of complaints and dissatisfaction arises when the buyer believes he is investing in the purchase of certain stocks and securities, he has gambled and lost. In no money management problem of pure speculation. Such a person more important that the purchaser may find that instead of investing, follow the sound Better Business Bureau advice your chamber of commerce constantly passes along. "Before you invest—investigate!"
