Moslem Mourning Takes On Weird Aspect Once A Year

KARACHI (UPI) — Bank clerk Ghulam Husain Merchant died at the age of 28 by his own hand. And although he lashed himself to death with blade-tipped chinas in a crowded downtown street, he attracted very little attention.

For Husain died on the 10th day of Muharram — mourning — when it is quite common to see men of the Shia sect flog themselves, slash themselves and mortify their bodies in the memory of an early Moslem martyr.

It is during Muharram that they recall the slaughter of Imam Husam and 71 of his followers in the Kerbala Desert centuries ago.

As the grandson of the Prophet Mohammed, Husain refused to recognize a usurper as caliph. Moslem history says his small band was captured by a 4,000-man army, deprived of water, tortured and slain one by one, with Husain killed last of all.

This year's Muharram was climaxed in Karachi by a parade of tens of thousands of persons carting great glittering shrines of paper and wood, beating drums, staging mock battles, lacerating themselves and crying the magic name of "Husain!"

Along their route, citizens put up stalls to dispense cool water, recalling the thirst of the martyrs. Karachi's main thoroughfare, Bunder Road, and surrounding areas were closed for vehicular traffic. People jammed the street from wall to wall.

Men and boys raced through the crowds blowing billows of burning gasoline from their mouths, while others twirled flaming baskets of charcoal at the end of long poles. In the background were the throbs of drums and the chant of dull-eyed dancers, flailing the air with knives, red to their waists in blood.

The procession moved slowly out to the bay, where the shrines were to drift away.

Muharram is an occasion for violence, but Moslems say it commemorates an event of nobility.

The martyr Husain, they say, died for democracy and rule by consent against usurpers.

Contest To Be Held

NEW YORK (UPI)—More than 150,000 young Americans are expected to compete in the 1960 Scholastic Writing Awards — the world's largest literary competition for secondary school students.

Sponsored by the Sheaffer Pen Co. and conducted by Scholastic Magazines, the event offers cash prizes totalling $3,675 plus pens and gold keys, for winning entries in several classifications including short story, poetry, essay and dramatic script.

Juries of outstanding authors and educators will select the winning manuscripts when the contest ends on March 1, 1960.

Nearly 600,000 pop corn poppers were sold in the United States in 1958.
